A BIG BLAST.

Too Much Dynamite Used at Johnstown.

An Eager Engineer Almost Ruins What the Flood Spared.

The Debris Problem Effectively Solved by the Explosion.

Fourteen More Bodies Recovered—Touching Letter from Vice-President Morton—Rebuilding Begun.

By Telegraph to The Times.

JOHNSTOWN (Pa.), June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] Sunshine has succeeded the morning showers. This is the first bright noontide Johnstown has seen for weeks. The several thousand men who are anxious to clean up this ruined city are hoping for fair weather from this on. The Conemaugh's swollen, rushing current reminds Johnstown people of the day preceding the flood. High water is an advantage, however, as it carries away a great portion of the impurities lodged along the banks.

Maj. Phillips's dynamiters have had Johnstown in a state of nervous terror all day, and this evening General Manager Fulton of the Cambria Iron Company dictated a forcible protest to Gov. Beaver, stating that the mills and offices of the company were being ruined by the blasts, that Adjt.-Gen. Hastings had paid no attention to two requests for its discontinuance, and that the State would be held responsible for any further damage done. Before the message was sent, however, Adjt.-Gen. Hastings had issued an order to Maj. Phillips to discontinue the blasting.

Maj. Phillips has been engaged since Wednesday in blowing out the wreckage in the channel of the Conemaugh above the Pennsylvania Railroad stone bridge. He was anxious to have a passage for the water by this evening, and to that end put in a 500-pound blast of dynamite at noon. The blast was placed under two buildings, one of which was lying upon the other, and both of them were covered with logs. The explosion was terrific. The next blast, not being placed so deep, was 400 pounds. This one did all the damage. The report was awful, and the strongest houses in the city trembled like leaves. All the glass was blown out of the windows of Odd Fellows' Hall, and the rear wall of the hall was wrecked. The Catholic Church fell upon the Baltimore and Ohio tracks, blockading them. Chimneys rattled down all around, and dishes were broken in houses in Kernville, half a mile away.

When asked about the matter, Maj. Phillips said: "We have used only 2000 pounds of dynamite today. The charges will not be so heavy hereafter. I had no idea we were doing any damage. So far as I know, no persons were injured."

Adjt.-Gen. Hastings today received a letter from Vice-President Morton, saying that on his return to his country home he found that his little girls, from 8 to 14 years of age, had been hard at work since the terri-

[illegible] clothing for the poor, homeless children who have survived the floods; that he forwards today 127 articles of wearing apparel "made by their own hands or purchased with their own money, with some of their dresses, and that his children will feel greatly obliged if you will cause the clothing to be distributed among the little sufferers by the recent calamity, for whom they feel the deepest sympathy."

AN ENGINEERING FEAT.

The opening of the wedge-like raft above the stone bridge today was an engineering feat. For ten days several hundred men have been at work upon the heterogeneous mass, but only about sixty feet of the channel had been cleared, when on Wednesday William Phillips of Lewiston and a force of dynamiters were put at work. Six acres of solidly-packed wreckage wedged between the river banks by a hydraulic force that cannot be estimated, have in three days melted away. Large frame houses, hundreds of logs and monster trees were tangled up and bound together with wire and iron bars brought down with the flood. The scene this afternoon, when the great mass moved down the river, was a remarkable one. The crowds that lined the shores, and the now famous stone bridge, raised a shout that was heard the length and breadth of the valley.

The west bank of the Conemaugh is again a furnace of fire tonight. The wreckage torn up by the dynamite today was piled up and the torch applied, and the whole valley is illuminated.

SANITARY REPORT.

Measles are very prevalent among children, and the Bedford-street hospital has two cases of pneumonia. Bronchitis and diarrhœa are very general among the workmen. There is no sickness of consequence among the militia.

From the most authentic records obtainable the number of bodies so far recovered is 1533. Fourteen bodies were taken out today.

Dr. Free of the State Board of Health inspected the river towns as far down as Sang Hollow today. The worst discovery made was a large number of dead horses and colts floating in the river. The dynamite explosions have brought the carcasses to the surface. They are in a bad state of decomposition.

Eight carloads of lumber arrived today. Rough sheds are already being erected in the heart of the city to be used as stores.

Depot Burned at Stockton.

STOCKTON, June 15.—The Southern Pacific Company's freight depot was burned this afternoon. The firemen were unable to check the flames, and the entire depot, part of the platform and two freight cars were destroyed. None of the books or records of the company were saved. The cause of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed a spark from a locomotive fell on the roof. The building was valued at $40,000 and the freight destroyed at $8000.

The Proposed Hawaiian Cable.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 15.—J. F. Waterhouse, Sr., a capitalist of Honolulu, arrived today on the steamship Umatilla. The object of his visit is supposed to be the formation of a company to construct a cable between San Francisco and Honolulu at an estimated cost of $1,500,000. It is understood that the Hawaiian Government will furnish from $300,000 to $500,000, the balance to be raised here.

Trouble Among the Lutherans.

PITTSBURGH (Pa.), June 15.—In the Lutheran Synod today a sensation was created by a report of a committee favoring the adoption of the old common service of the church, which was laid aside several years ago for a new one. This blow at the new service provoked a vigorous discussion, which will be continued on Monday. There is much difference of opinion on the matter.

Colorado Woman Suffragists.

DENVER (Colo.), June 15.—A Cheyenne special to the News says: At the Territorial convention of women held here today a resolution was adopted requesting the coming constitutional convention to incorporate a woman's suffrage plank in the Constitution.

Fruit for the East.

SACRAMENTO, June 15.—Three carloads of fruit were shipped east tonight by the California Fruit Union, consisting of peaches, apricots, cherries, plums, prunes and Bartlett pears.

CHICAGO'S MYSTERY.

The Cronin Murder Still a Puzzle.

Luke Dillon Says Sullivan Will Be Indicted.

Telegrams of Sympathy Received by the Irish Leader.

President Fitzgerald of the National League Writes a Letter Denouncing Cronin's Assassination—A Suspect.

By Telegraph to The Times.

CHICAGO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] The special Grand Jury in the Cronin case began the fourth day's session this morning. Indications are that several days will be consumed ere the jury is prepared to make the final report.

Miss Annie Murphy reiterated to the jury her oft-told tale about having seen Dr. Cronin on a street car, apparently bound for the depot at the time when, as subsequent events indicate, he was cold in death. Miss Murphy still insists that the man she saw was Cronin or his ghost, and adheres emphatically to all the details of her original story.

Thomas G. Windes, law partner of Alexander Sullivan, was called and questioned minutely regarding Sullivan's speculations. Witness knew but little regarding Sullivan's private affairs, and, it is stated, was unable to give the jury any valuable information.

Alexander Sullivan's friends were jubilant today over his release. Lawyer Trude, referring to Judge Tuley's decision, said: "Sullivan has been receiving letters and telegrams from all over the country expressing indignation at the course pursued toward him, and tendering aid and sympathy."

Luke Dillon, the well-known representative of the Clan-na-Gael, said he thought Judge Tuley's decision was a just one, as the evidence before the Coroner's jury was not sufficient to warrant Sullivan being held without bail. He expects that an indictment will be returned against Sullivan, but cannot say that he has any real grounds for the expectation.

Thomas Tiernan, who was arrested last night, was released from custody this evening.

THE MURDER DENOUNCED.

Letter from the President of the Irish League.

CHICAGO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] P. W. Dunne of Pekin, Ill., formerly of Chicago, received today a letter in response to, as he says, "a request for the president of the Irish National League of America to speak out publicly." Dunne claims to be the person who originated the charges against Alexander Sullivan. He expresses dissatisfaction with the tone of the letter from President Fitzgerald, intimating that it is not as radical as was desired. Fitzgerald's letter is as follows:

"The members of the Irish National League of America are law-abiding citizens of the United States, and hold the murder in as much abhorrence as any other element of the community can possibly do. Honest men are not necessitated to protest their honesty, and the league has no need to protest its horror of the murder. None but those whose wish is father to the thought would for an instant couple the name of the Irish National League of America with crime of any kind, much less with the deplorable tragedy of which your city has been the theater. A PRESENTATION.

When the wine was reached President Humphreys rose to his feet and rapped the audience to order. He introduced Mr. Denis, who, in a few well-chosen sentences presented, in the name of the citizens, a most magnificent silver service to Mr. Crank. The set was incased in a handsome rosewood case, on which was inscribed in letters of gold the following:

"Presented to Hon. J. F. Crank, by the citizens of Los Angeles, on the completion of the Los Angeles Cable System, an enterprise which he originated. June 15, 1889."

Mr. Denis was applauded frequently, and when he brought his remarks to a close, Mr. Crank was called on.

MR. CRANK'S SPEECH.

Mr. Crank, in response, said:

Gentlemen: From the time of my invitation to meet with you to the present moment I have been laboring under an increasing load of embarrassment. Could I have delegated to another the fulfillment of this duty I would have gladly done so. But it is fitting that I should personally respond to the words that have been expressed, and testify my appreciation of this representative gathering, and to thank you all for this manifestation of your good feelings and good will. However fluent one may be in the expression of his sentiments, there will occasionally come a time when words fail us and are inadequate to express our feelings.

Such a time and such an occasion is before me tonight. You have surprised me in this movement, you have surprised me in the warmth of your oral testimony, and in the manner in which you have sought to express your approval of my acts in connection with some of the improvements of our city; you have surprised me by our being together tonight.

I cannot conceal, nor would I try to hide from you, this evening, the great gratification that exists within me in thus receiving your stamp of approval upon the public enterprise which it has fallen to my lot to become interested in, and your satisfaction with my personal efforts and labors in that direction, especially when I stop to consider the representative class of gentlemen who are assembled here tonight. I am pleased that in your opinion my efforts in that direction merit the approval and commendation of my fellow-citizens, and that the enterprises have been of some service in the development of our city. I would not assume the full credit.

I have labored with able associates, with all of whom I would be pleased to divide the honors of this hour.

We cannot claim, nor do we feel that you assume that our labors have been engaged singly with a desire to meet the necessities of our city. We would not assume that our action in this matter was purely for the benefit of the public—we did hope some personal gain. Motives among men are like the main-spring of your watches, so hidden that in reading the progress of time you are not reminded of the power and incentive that propels. As a producing investment we studied the question of this city carefully, its present needs and future requirements. Every phase of the question was considered, including our duty to use the position we then held in the city for the city's good. Our convictions were that the time was opportune for improvement, and that the city possessed the elements that in the end would create it one of the large cities of the Union.

To insure such a result, to secure such a position for Los Angeles, we felt demanded first of all a faith among our own people that such an outcome would be ultimately reached. We decided to back up our faith by proceeding with the enterprise. We entertained a firm belief in the benefits and development that would accrue to the reputation of this city. We were of the opinion that it would add to and inspire confidence in its growth. We have faith to believe that our enterprises have benefited others to a greater extent than has fallen to ourselves.

While our city has risen gloriously from the sleepy adobe we cannot expect the outside world to join with our fortunes, or even appreciate our being, unless we as individuals are willing to do all that we can in our own behalf.

I am one of those who believe that Los Angeles has a destiny; the making of it is in the hands of her own people; the advantages of any enterprise needful for her requirement can be secured whenever her people unite and demand it.

In my own experience events have justified my faith. The city has kept pace with our particular work, and we believe will continue to do so. It has come within my province to personally note the standing and advantage of other cities. I cannot recall one of like number in population that has secured as a result of its own energy and public spirit the advantages we possess.

Certainly none surpass us in our possessions of civic wealth. We are equal to the best in our public press, the standing of our professions, our merchants, and best of all we excel in our brainy muscle.

And these forces are the bond Los Angeles offers to the stranger as a guarantee of future success and greatness.

This is not the time nor place for me to enter upon the details of our construction. These have elsewhere been made public by the able gentlemen who have them in charge.

Again I thank you all for your welcome, and the honor you have thus publicly bestowed upon me. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

HON. STEPHEN M. WHITE.

Hon. Stephen M. White was next called upon, and he made one of his happy after-dinner speaches. He stated that he was not prepared to make an after-dinner speech, but he succeeded in keeping his audience in roars of laughter, and when he got down to serious business, he was listened to with profound attention.

The best proof of the general belief in the prosperity of Los Angeles is the amount of money that is being spent on permanent improvements by foreign capitalists.

At the conclusion of Mr. White's remarks the chairman stated that he had read an article in one of the eastern newspapers of a recent date, in which it was stated that the eastern capitalists did not know what to do with their money, and he thought Mayor Hazard could enlighten them on the subject.

MAYOR HAZARD.

Mr. Hazard made a humorous speech, and was frequently applauded. He suggested that, if there is any money floating around that cannot find investment it might be used in the Fourth of July celebration. He finally got down to the Council and Police Commission, and the audience had lots of fun at the expense of those bodies.

COL. H. G. OTIS

was then called on to give his ideas of early transportation, and he said:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: When the announcement of this very agreeable entertainment was made to me, I replied that it would give me great pleasure to be present, and when it was suggested that I would be expected to "make some remarks," my reply was that I was not ambitious to do that; but it occurred to me that upon an occasion like this, when we are met together for the purpose of doing honor to a gentleman who has achieved so much as has our honored guest in the way of bringing to a successful conclusion in our midst a great system of modern cable railway transportation, it would perhaps be appropriate to take a glance backward at the more primitive modes of transportation that prevailed in earlier days. I communicated my idea to my friend Harkness, told him that I had looked up the records upon the subject, and asked him, "Will the assemblage stand it?" He pretended that he thought they would; but somehow I did not believe he was more than half in earnest. I also said to your chairman, Mr. Humphreys, "Do you think they will stand it?" He said, "Well, try it on," and so, with your indulgence, gentlemen, I will "try it on."

The business of transportation is very old—as old as the world itself, and coextensive with the affairs of men. We have, in fact, good grounds for claiming that it originated in the Garden of Eden. The first traffic was in apples and fig leaves—that is matter of history. Adam was the first common carrier, but on account of the unique cargo he transported he is better entitled to be called an uncommon carrier; for what man in all the ages freighted so precious a craft as did the first man? Nearly ever since he was created, man has been ambitious to carry something—either himself, his neighbor, his neighbor's goods and chattels, or an election or something. [Laughter.]

One of the earliest water craft ever set afloat was commanded by Capt. Noah, a veteran of 600 years, and it set sail in the wide waters of the far East at a very early period in the history of the world. It was loaded with a mixed cargo, including passengers and other live stock. There was no opposition line, no competition in freight or passenger rates, and the water was immensely high. The skipper roamed the vasty deep for a considerable period, running without any time card and making a voyage of some 150 days, I believe, though I do not profess to be well upon the river news of that time. After awhile the freshet quit being so fresh, and Noah's boat got into shallow water and struck on a snag—the most historic snag on record. It was named Ararat. Noah being at the end of his unique voyage, concluded to heave to. No collector of the port came around to bother him, there was no port of entry, and no revenue tug went out to meet him. So he just concluded to go ashore and tie up, which he did as soon as the coast was clear, or in about a year from the time he had weighed anchor. This was Noah's first and last voyage, so far as I can ascertain from the marine records. The passengers debarked, dispersed, and took to agriculture and other commonplace pursuits, after going through the wreck for salvage.

Between this event and the discovery of America and New Jersey, a great many water craft, both civil and military, were launched, navigated and went to pieces. I will not undertake to describe them in detail, but for further information will refer you to the marines. [Laughter.]

The American aborigines knew a trick or two about transportation. People who lead a primitive, pastoral and migratory life—who have no fixed habitations or established pursuits—are perforce compelled to be ingenious in devising methods for moving themselves, their families and other "traps" between distant points. These early men of the forest and the plain in our own country acquired great expertness in traversing land and water—that is, great expertness considering their lights and the means at hand. They could not of course compete with a modern cannon-ball train or a cable railway of the Los Angeles pattern—not to any great extent. But they got there all the same. Their savage life was full of incitements to migration—to freedom of action, like the birds, the beasts and the fish. They became skilled in woodcraft; they knew the language of signs; they were remarkable natural geographers and primitive topographers; they possessed a marvelous instinct for learning the whereabouts of the foe, and never permitted him to get away by reason of the superabundance of impedimenta in the army; wherein they differed from some modern commanders I could name. They were always ready to plunge into the impenetrable wilderness or to navigate rapid and dangerous streams. Their severe training made them, when friendly, invaluable guides for expeditions of the pioneer white man; and it was a rare paleface who was able to cope with them in expertness in their particular line of business.

On the North American continent (as observed by Ringwalt, the leading authority on transportation questions) not a few of the principal land and water routes which are now favorite avenues of travel and traffic "were traversed for centuries by savage predecessors, their trails carving out the lines of our common roads, turnpikes and railways, and their light canoes being supplanted on the rivers and lakes by our steamboats."

The canoe in its different forms—the dugout, the birch-bark, and the coracle—was the vessel universally used by the original native American party to reach the back districts. The canoe was, in fact, an indispensable adjunct to the politics of that day. When the navigator struck shallows, falls or rapids, he could pick up his light and frail craft, and putting it upon his back carry it around the obstruction, or by portages from river to river, or even between distinct water systems. The canoe was to nearly all the North American tribes what the horse is to the Arab. The scope for water transportation was vast, and comparatively easy, on the other side of the continent, by reason of the abundance and contiguity of eastern water systems. Great portions of the entire country could be traversed from north to south by following the course of the Allegheny, the Ohio, the Missouri and the Mississippi rivers; while from east to west the same result could be reached by taking the line of the St. Lawrence, the great lakes and some of their northwestern tributaries, the Upper Missouri and the Columbia and its tributaries—filling the gaps by resorting to a few comparatively short overland marches in conjunction with the long leagues of sailing.

So a great country was traversed at an early day by an uneducated and barbarous people.

"Lo the poor Indian, whose untutored mind Sees God in clouds and hears him in the wind."

The Indian canoes used were of various sizes. Those of the Iroquois were made of bark, and varied from twelve feet in length, with a carrying capacity of two men, to forty feet in length, with a tonnage for thirty men. Two tons was the favorite capacity for commercial craft. Some were made of birch bark, which did not readily warp; some were laboriously hollowed out of trunks of trees by the aid of [illegible]; some were made by stretching the skins of animals over a light wicker framework.

In the far north, on this side of the continent, the Aleutian Islanders make a large freight boat, called bidarra, with a capacity of four or five tons, from the skins of sea-lions stretched over a wooden framework. The skins are fastened together by thongs and the seams painted to make them water-tight. I myself have been in one of these boats, loaded with $5000 worth of fur-seal skins and 20 native oarsmen, with nothing between me and the bottom of Bering Sea save the thickness of a sea-lion's hide. A smaller boat, answering to the Esquimau kyak, and called a bidarka, is made of the intestine coverings of the same animal. This graceful craft is 12 to 16 feet long, not more that 18 or 20 inches wide, has one, two or three holes in its top the size of a man's body, is very sharp at both ends, and rides rough seas like a feather when propelled by the two-bladed paddle of an expert native oarsman. They are adapted for either one, two or three navigators, and will capsize if a land-lubber even looks at them.

Columbus was visited in the West Indies by a boss Indian in a trading canoe eight feet wide, hollowed out of a single tree, and propelled by 25 rowers.

But for lightness and consequent ease of transfer from one river to another, or around insurmountable obstacles, the birch-bark canoe took the palm. Hiawatha's birch barque is described by Commodore Longfellow:

—"the forest's life was in it,
All its mystery and its magic,
All the lightness of the birch tree
All the toughness of the cedar,
All the larch's supple sinews;
And it floated on the river,
Like a yellow leaf in autumn,
Like a yellow water lily."

Father Charlevoix, that intrepid pioneer missionary, who traversed the French possessions in North America, carrying a flame of religious fire into the heart of the wilderness, describes these canoes, which came to be used by the French themselves and nearly all the Indians except the Iroquois Club. These flying cockle-shells were made with true savage patience and care; they were made so light that a man could carry one of them a mile, though they were "above twenty foote long" and two feet wide, and they would "fly the track" upon the least provocation. They were paddled or poled, owing to whether they were going with or against the current. The commercial canoes of these native navigators would carry 12 men and four tons.

Washington Irving, describing a trip made by fur-traders across the Rockies in early times, tells of a custom of the Arickarees, who were famous for the number of their horses:

"While the fur-traders were regarding the village, they beheld a singular fleet coming down the river. It consisted of a number of canoes, each made of a single buffalo hide stretched on sticks, so as to form a kind of circular trough. Each one was navigated by a single squaw, who knelt in the bottom and paddled, towing after her frail bark a bundle of floating wood, intended for firing. This kind of canoe is in frequent use among the Indians. The Buffalo hide being rapidly made up into a bundle, and transported on horseback, it is very serviceable in conveying baggage across rivers."

The "dug-out" got its name, of course, from the fact that it was dug out of a solid log—an operation requiring great labor on the part of tribes not provided with a kit of carpenter's tools or dynamite. The Indian, by the help of fire and his stone ax, "would bring down a giant tree from the forest, and sever a section of the trunk of the desired length, with regard to proportions of width and depth. This solid butt he would then split with wedges, and by burning and gouging, would hollow it out, reducing the sides and bottom to the utmost thinness consistent with buoyancy and security."

Do not be impatient, gentlemen! All these aboriginal facts lead directly up to the modern cable railway and vestibule train, though they may appear to you to be somewhat remote. But bear in mind that we are now dealing with original principles, and indulge me in a little more ancient history. I don't pretend that this is news.

In their land movements the aborigines were not so well provided with contrivances to facilitate transportation. The burden strap, used in carrying heavy loads, was commonly worn around the forehead and lashed to a litter borne on the back. It was usually about fifteen feet in length, and braided into a belt in the center, three or four inches wide. It was, after all, not much behind the old Californian method of yoking oxen to the sudden carreta, where the yoke was placed across the base of the animals' horns. The Indian system of carrying burdens on their backs was the embodiment of "main strength and awkwardness," combining the greatest amount of human effort with the smallest practical results. The squaws did most of it; and yet, strange to say, they hadn't enterprise enough to get up a women's rights league and strike for shorter hours and horse or steam power. [Laughter.]

In the Artic regions the snowshoe and the dog-sledge are favorite aids to transportation. Great speed is made by men wearing the snowshoe, which is a device three feet long and 16 inches wide, looking something like a distorted cricket-bat. On the great river Yukon, and in the region of Alaska about Norton Sound, as well as in high latitudes on the Atlantic side, the sledge-train is a familiar device for covering the vast distances between one whaling station and another. A journey of 1200 miles or so in the dead of winter, with the thermometer down to the point of mercury freezing, is considered only a trifle for both Indians and white men. The Mahlemut dogs live on dried fish, bend on their traces and howl. It is considered a very beautiful style of traveling, with no Interstate Commerce Commission to make anybody afraid.

The horse is popular with nearly all Indian tribes. When the noble red man "got onto" the horse, long after its introduction into Mexico by the conquering Spaniards, and the gradual spread of European settlements to the limits of what is now the Union, the savage made the most of his equine opportunity. The Indian pony, both as a warhorse and a beast of burden, is a feature in the history of all our Indian wars and frontier settlements. Every frontiersman is familiar with the scene presented by the removal of an Indian village, or of an entire tribe, from one point to another in the Far West. The general method adopted was to fasten to the patient little animal's back the tent-poles of the lodges, which were left to trail behind them, and so aranged as to furnish a support for the skins which formed the tent or lodge, for other "traps and belongings," and sometimes even for children or women. The contrivance is sometimes called a "travail"—a very good name, I should say, for the condition of the passenger.

Among the primitive water craft used on the Atlantic coast were sloops, pinks, ketches, brigantines, barks and ships. They were as various and as curious in style as they were crude in construction. Sloops were the most numerous. The vast changes in maritime architecture from that day to this marks the mighty progress made by the country in 300 years. The difference between a Massachusetts Bay sloop of 1674, with its logy hull and crude sails, and a Hudson River passenger steamer of 1889, or a floating palace ship of the Occidental and Oriental line, illustrates the difference between then and now.

The transition from the canoe to the skiff or batteau marks a step forward from the merely aboriginal [illegible] transportation. In the eighteenth century, when the services of civilized boat-builders could be procured, the building of batteaux was begun; but where Indian methods of construction had to be relied upon, the white man contented himself with canoes for his trading expeditions. Some voyageurs on the Susquehanna even preferred canoes for all purposes. A batteau may be described as a light boat, long in proportion to its breadth, and wider in the middle than in the ends. An empty batteau of two tons burthen required three men to navigate it up stream, and a loaded batteau double that number of men. Poles, oars and sails were used alternately, as required, and the rule was to hug the shore whenever the current was strong.

On the Connecticut River a flat-bottomed skiff followed the canoe, and if I mistake not I remember something of the sort on the Ohio and Muskingum. It was a crude affair, pointed at the bow, as broad aft as amidships, flat on the bottom, with upright sides having a little outward flare, and vocal rowlocks. It was a "daisy" craft, and no mistake.

On the western rivers the flatboat or broad-horn came into use at an early day, succeeding the canoe and batteau, and being designed and used exclusively as down-stream boats. They belonged to the class which included also arks and rafts, and were chiefly distinguished as "floaters," keeping in the current, and going with the stream. They were usually launched in a time of flood, and went down stream with ease and velocity. A writer skilled in nautical affairs, (which I am not,) says that "the only claim of the flatboat or broad-horn to rank as a vessel was due to the fact that it floated upon water and was used as a vehicle of transportation." The phrase "broad-horn" originated in the fact that many of the flatboats were provided with large steering-oars, hung on fixed pivots on the sides, by which these cumbrous contrivances were managed.

During the latter part of the last century and the beginning of the present it was common for the adventurous men in the regions west of the Alleghanies and contiguous to the Ohio River to participate in flatboat enterprises. These hardy pioneers represented that great central region of the Republic that grows blue grass, limestone rock, big men, great soldiers and statesmen, and beautiful women. Many a man counts his starting-point in life from the time when he built a flatboat on the banks of the Allegheny, the Muskingum, the Wabash or the Ohio, loaded it with merchantable produce—flour, bacon, apples, hooppoles and whisky—made a trip to New Orleans, that southern mecca where our friend Denis hails from, saw the elephant in his lair in the regions traversed, and returned by the best routes and methods that were available—none of them luxurious.

These "down-the-river" voyages, albeit slow, were full of peril and adventure. They required months for their accomplishment. A shot from the shore by some Indian or reckless desperado of the Lafitte type might terminate abruptly the voyage and the lives of the navigators in blood. A moment's neglect of the steersman might wreck the unshapely craft and all the hopes of its owners, hundreds of miles from home, in an inhospitable wilderness. There was danger everywhere, in the currents, eddies, whirlpools, bayous and snags of the tortuous Father of Waters, but there was also danger from the half-civilized and often desperate dwellers upon the banks—the outlawed criminals and desperate adventurers from civilization who skulked about the shores or prowled with light canoes among the bayous and creeks, watching for chances to plunder. The deliberate, slow-moving flatboat was fast enough for its day and people, and there was luck in its leisure, but it would not do for today.

The early trade conducted by these flatboats was something enormous in value; it mounted into the millions. The cargoes included corn in the ear and in the barrel, pork, bacon, flour, cattle and fowls; a great assortment of notions from Cincinnati and elsewhere; corn brooms, cabinet furniture, cider, apples, ploughs, cordage and the like.

Even at the present day flatboats are built on the Alleghany River, and sent down stream on these trading voyages.

The transportation of coal was an immense industry. Great fleets of big flat-bottomed boats, lashed together and towed by puffing stern-wheel steamers, made their way down the western rivers, each boat carrying 15,000 bushels of coal. The Pitsburg coalboat fleet is estimated to be worth $10,000,000, and in a single year (1883) they transported 4,500,000t ons o coal to market.

Arks and rafts were another species of western-river craft that had their day. The great timber raft was the original boomer. As far back as the year 1826 the value of the property which descended the Susquehanna was estimated at $4,500,000, and fifteen hundred arks passed down the river, never to return. The value of a discarded ark at the gulf was about fifteen dollars, and the annual loss on that account, and by accidents, etc., was more than $300,000.

The great gap between these primitive modes of travel and transportation I leave you, gentlemen, to fill in your own minds. It is a long leap to the improved methods of this advanced age, and I think none of us would care to go back.

I have aimed, not to describe the steam railways, the great steamships and the splendid cable-road systems of the present, but only to tell you something of the rude and primitive ways of early days in our country, that by the contrast you may the more readily see what we as a people have done in the domain of material and mechanical advancement.

And, now, gentlemen, I turn to our honored guest, Mr. Crank [applause] my friend, your friend and the friend of the city [applause] and give him that well-earned credit which you all will say is due him as the pioneer cable-road builder of Los Angeles, and the man who has done so much towards giving us that overland rail[illegible] competition which we today enjoy. [Applause.]

was called for, and he made quite an interesting speech. While he was willing to give Mr. Crank due credit for what he has done for the city, he thought the Chicago capitalists who came to the assistance of Mr. Crank and his partners should not be overlooked, for had they not put up their money the cable road would not be in operation today.

OTHER SPEAKERS.

H. Z. Osborne was asked to give his experience while in Washington, D.C., and he made quite a lengthy speech on that subject.

At this point in the proceedings Mr. Denis rose to his feet and stated that Chairman Humphreys had just handed him a note, written on a visiting card, in which the Chair was asked to call on President Frankenfield of the City Council to explain the "power of the veto." Mr. Frankenfield could not be found, and Mayor Hazard was again called to his feet. He stated that he did not have much faith in the veto, but he proposed to stay by it to the end of the chapter, or until he converts the Council and Board of Police Commissioners.

Col. Walter S. Moore was loudly called for at the conclusion of Mr Hazard's remarks, and he made a typical after-dinner speech. He gave the present Council some hard slaps, and wound up by paying a high tribute to Mr. Crank.

Ex-Chief Engineer Jewett, the only other officer of the original cable system present, was called on, but his modesty was too much for him, and he sat down without having said too much.

Hon. E. F. Spence made quite a lengthy speech, in which he gave the audience some solid pointers on energy and push, and wound up by paying Mr. Crank a high tribute.

MAJ. W. R. BURKE

then rose and said:

Mr. Chairman: To make suitable response on such an occasion and under such circumstances, would certainly try the faculties of one far more capable than I. For this assemblage, representing as it does every artery of the civilization of Los Angeles, has not convened to crown with an olive wreath a victor in the Olympian games, or to vote a triumph to a successful son of Mars; it has done better still, in that it seeks to place a well-deserved wreath upon the brow of a distinguished son in consideration of services far more beneficial, far more lasting and far more glorious than were ever the achievements of the combined ancients.

Groping in darkness, as it were; isolated from those they held most dear, exhaustion and thirst had well nigh overcome the tribes of Israel. Moses smote the rock and there flowed forth sparkling, cooling water in great abundance.

A little more than four years ago the Hon. John F. Crank smote our modern industrial rock in successfully constructing and maintaining the San Gabriel Valley Railroad, from which flowed the great transcontinental system, the Santa Fé. And who is there to say that the majestic growth of Los Angeles did not originate with that consummation? With its twin sister in development, the Southern Pacific, the Santa Fé Railroad accomplished wonders for us. Not that they sought to benefit us alone, but as a matter of course, from the very nature of things. The building of the Santa Fé Railroad, in addition to this wonderful development of Southern California, has also gone far to show the people of this State—and has been a great benefit thereto—that the only true solution of the problem of railroad corporations versus the people is live, healthy and successful railway competition, and the more of it the better. To that end, we should be as liberal as [possible consistent with public and private] interests, reaching out the strong arms of encouragement, both in our individual and collective capacity, that they may come and be of us and with us, and partake of our superior advantages, assisting to develop the choicest gifts of Nature. And right here is it not pertinent to ask, in view of the colossal work that has been wrought, to a great extent, through the instrumentality of our distinguished guest, why we should not at an early day have still another great transcontinental railway system at our doors in the shape of the Salt Lake and Union Pacific. Such a consummation would certainly be a prodigious factor for good. It would not only add to our great competitive lines; it would open up a mighty country as a tributary to Los Angeles; it would do many things of a beneficial character, but the chiefest of these, aside from the competitive features, is that it would solve the fuel question and place the choicest of coal at our doors at a moderate price. Then we would hear the hum of the spindle and the roar of the furnace, and bread-winners of the mechanic arts would be among us as in the Lowells of the East, the Pittsburghs of the West and the Birminghams and Atlantas of the South.

A master hand is needed to stimulate and give force and effect to the work now in hand, looking to the construction of the Salt Lake Railway. Who is more fitted, or rather I should say, who is as well fitted for this undertaking as the gentleman whom we seek to honor tonight? Let us drink to Mr. Crank, let us drink to the toast of what he has accomplished for us, with a wish and a hope that he will not say nay to the united voice of appreciative thousands that he go forth in this new enterprise and do in that what he has so well and ably done for us all in other lines. [Applause.]

Judge Clark and several other speakers addressed the banqueters, and the party did not disperse until an early hour this morning.

SELDOM a day passes that something does not burst at the electric light works. Yesterday there was a small explosion, followed by the severe burning of an employé by falling hot bricks. What with these constant explosions, the offensive smell of the petroleum fuel, and the protracted screech of the steam whistle, the electric light works are beginning to be regarded by residents in that neighborhood as a first-class nuisance.

As if the youth of California were not being ruined in health fast enough by cigarettes, the coffee-houses of San Francisco have adopted the plan of presenting every customer with a cigarette free. Those among the messenger and newsboys who have not yet acquired the pernicious habit are thus almost forced into it. California ought to follow the example set by several other States, and make it unlawful to supply minors with tobacco.

THE reception and banquet tendered by citizens, last evening, at the elegant California Club rooms, to Hon. J. F. Crank, in recognition of his services as founder of the cable railway system of Los Angeles, was a brilliant success, the guests present representing every shade of opinion, and the most diverse walks in life. The suggestion that Mr. Crank should take hold of the Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad was received with marked favor.

THE city of Buenos Ayres, in the Argentine Republic, has expended during the last six years ten millions of dollars in constructing 60 magnificent school building for 600 pupils each. These schoolhouses are the finest buildings in the city, and a collective exhibit of them has made a sensation at the Paris Exposition. The Argentine Republic is now, after the United States, the country which spends most, in proportion to its population, for education.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Santa Monica Outlook advises the citizens of that place to increase its attractions. There is good sense in the recommendation. Our Southern California resorts are too apt to be dependent entirely upon the natural attractions of sea and sky, which, after a time, begin to pall even on the most enthusiastic lovers of nature, if not varied by some little artistic or social diversion. The springs and other leading resorts on the continent of Europe levy a small tax on visitors staying a week or more, to cover the expense of a good orchestra, sprinkling the promenades, etc. Some such plan as this might be tried here, as few visitors would object to pay a trifle for such improvements. At the same time, citizens of our seaside resorts would find it pay to start the ball a-rolling themselves, and make strangers within their gates feel inclined to prolong their stay. An orchestral performance every afternoon and evening at the end of the Santa Monica wharf would be a good starter in this direction for the favorite suburb of Los Angeles.

FROM LOS ANGELES TO THE OCEAN.

A trip from Los Angeles, southwest, toward the ocean, furnishes an agreeable surprise to those who have accustomed themselves to believe that there is nothing but corner stakes and scale-infested orchards around Los Angeles, and at the same time affords fresh encouragement to those who insist that the thick settlement of the entire section between Los Angeles and the ocean is only a matter of a short time.

Leaving the city by way of Figueroa street—the coming Fifth Avenue of Los Angeles—a long succession of market gardens are passed, every available acre for several miles being under cultivation. Unfortunately, with one exception, only Chinamen are to be seen. As far as can be learned, there are only two among all the market gardens in this section run by white men. The business is certainly a profitable one, and it is difficult to see why it should be abandoned to the Celestials, when so many of our own race are seeking employment.

After leaving Figueroa street, the road lies along Vermont avenue, upon which is laid the Rosecrans dummy railway. This has just been acquired by the Redondo Beach Company, who are giving it a much-needed overhauling. It is expected that trains will be running over this road to Redondo Beach within thirty days. Rosecrans, the much-advertised boom town, is now devoted to the prosaic but profitable purpose of raising barley and hogs. At frequent intervals through here, among the barley fields which cover the hills and valleys, one comes across isolated farms, where corn, vegetables and fruit are growing vigorously, without irrigation, although water is, in many places, 150 feet from the surface. Beyond Rosecrans is the great Dominguez estate, which at one time covered all this section, the heirs still owning about 12,000 acres. This portion of it, known as East Redondo, has been settled by a number of small farmers, who are raising splendid crops on high land without any irrigation whatever. Potatoes, averaging nearly a pound apiece, strawberries, and corn already in tassel are here raised without artificial moisture, thus entirely upsetting the theory of those who assert that, for all except bottom lands, irrigation is absolutely necessary. After cattle and sheep had had their day, it was grudgingly admitted by old-timers that grain could be grown on our plains without irrigation. Now, it has been fully proved that any other crop will flourish, if properly cultivated and cared for. There are, however, still many old Southern Californians who refuse to believe even the evidence of their senses. As an old German farmer put it, they won't believe there's water under the ground, even when they see it. Such fossils are, however, being rapidly pushed aside by the incoming tide of home-seekers, who have no time-honored prejudices to nourish, and who work the soil for all there is in it.

Redondo Beach is looking up. The new management evidently mean business. There is a good wharf, ships discharging lumber, and a general air of activity. From here, back through Inglewood, the country traveled is one vast barley field—barley for hay and barley for feed. Unfortunately for those who stick to this old-time crop, the market, both for hay and feed, is at present very dull, and the growers will scarcely do more than make expenses. The result will, however, be good, should this lead them to go into more varied—more "intense" farming, as the English call it. Too much land, skimmed over, has been the curse of this section. The great success which has attended all who have planted fruit, vegetables and corn, on the plains between Los Angeles and the sea, will certainly encourage many others to follow their example.

Such a trip as this, over these fertile plains—fertile wherever tickled with a hoe—under the mild June sun of the Southern California coast, whose heat is here so tempered by the ocean breeze that the traveler does not need to wipe his brow or his horses to turn a hair, cannot but confirm any observant citizen in the belief that, boom or no boom, the stream of immigration to Southern California must continue. All that we need is to make our advantages known—the true facts, without any exaggeration. It is those who come who are the favored ones, not we who for a consideration part with a portion of our possessions in this choicest section of God's footstool. There is but one Southern California, and Los Angeles is its metropolis.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

It seems that the French have not yet given up all hope of resuscitating the Panama Canal scheme. If they wish to accomplish anything, they have not much time to lose. If the plant and works are exposed to another rainy season, everything thus far accomplished will be virtually destroyed. The French Cabinet is willing, it appears, to busy itself with aiding the official liquidator of the company to procure the resources to keep the company afloat, and to have at least a simulation of activity on the isthmus during the time necessary for the studies of a commission, which is to report on the establishment of a French society, to be charged with the work of finishing up the enormous task left by De Lesseps.

It is calculated that ten months must elapse before the commission will be ready to report. The French Cabinet has, according to the most trustworthy advices, decided that "indifference to this affair of the Panama Canal, in which so many scores of millions of French savings are invested, is inadmissible; government must do something in the matter." The Banque d'Escompte has therefore laid before the Ministers a scheme which they are now considering, for an issue of 1,500,000 bonds of 25 francs each, with lottery attachment, to be reimbursed at 100 francs each at the end of seventy-five years. It would produce the sum of 37,500,000 francs, on which the 12,000,000 francs necessary to run the company for the ten months and the money to redeem certain stock from American hands would be lent. It is considered probable that the French Cabinet will give its adhesion to this scheme, and that during the ten months many other combinations may be made, to be in readiness when the commission makes its report.

From the most trustworthy reports that have been secured from the isthmus, there is little doubt that the completion of the canal is a practical impossibility—a financial impossibility, that is to say. There is, however, another phase of the question; which is, whether our Government would favorably regard the construction of a canal through the isthmus under French government aid, and which would, undoubtedly, be to a great measure under control of that government. This is a matter which may safely be left to the decision of the authorities at Washington, but whether or not political difficulties are thrown in the way of the enterprise, it is difficult to see how investors therein can possibly hope ever to get their money back.

THE cruel feminine fashion which demands the lives of millions of birds for their feathers has recently run in the direction of swallows, and enormous numbers of those harbingers of spring have been slain, in a wholesale manner, in the south of France, on their return from Africa, by means of electric wires. As a consequence, they are going to other countries, and the noxious insects upon which they feed are increasing proportionately.

A FRENCH paper states that at Cherbourg a short time ago two sailors were from 9 in the morning till 6 in the evening under water at the depth of 10 metres, in a submarine torpedo boat, without experiencing the least inconvenience. They were constantly in communication by telephone with a commission.

[This is probably the first time in the history of sport that a woman has officiated as umpire.]

A wrestling match on horseback and some fine athletic sports are also on the card, promising a big afternoon's sport.

A DISSOLUTE LIFE ENDED.

Ed A. Foye Takes an Overdose of Morphine.

A telegram was received from Spokane Falls yesterday by the Chancellor Commander of Olive Lodge, K. of P., announcing the death of Ed A. Foye, a member of the lodge at that place, from an overdose of morphine, and that his wife wanted him buried at that place.

Foye will be remembered in this city as a barkeeper at several of the high-toned saloons, during the year or more that he resided in Los Angeles. He was what is called a "pretty man," and was very popular with the women, cutting a wide swath in certain circles. He came to Los Angeles with a woman that he passed off as his wife, and for a time led a very retired life. It was claimed that he was never married to the woman, but that the two had lived together in Portland, Or., where Foye managed to work the town to the extent of $3000 or $4000, when he skipped out, and came to these parts. Stories of the fascinating "barkeep's" amours soon began to circulate, and it was not long before his name began to be coupled with that of a handsome grass widow. The actions of the pair soon became so open and notorious that the friends and relatives of the woman in the case could not shut their eyes to the fact, and pressure was brought to bear to get Foye out of town. They were successful, and one morning Mr. Foye turned up missing, and a day or two later the grass widow and her younger sister also took their departure. The next heard of the couple they were living together in Seattle. In the meantime the "wife" who had been left behind began to assert herself, and declared that she would follow Foye and the woman up, and make life a burden to them. It is presumed that she carried out her intention; at any rate, she left town and has not been seen in these parts since. From time to time word has been received from Foye by his friends in this city, and his move to Spokane Falls was duly made known. But little has been heard of him recently, and it was supposed that he was doing very well until the news of his sudden death was received. The supposition is that Foye committed suicide to get out of his troubles.

The body will be buried at Spokane Falls under the direction of the Knights of Pythias.

An Orange County Bill.

A bill was received by the Board of Supervisors yesterday which they carefully filed, but upon which they took no action. It is a bill for $60 for the payment of the judges, inspectors and clerks of precinct No. 2, Santa Ana, in the recent Orange county election. The bill calls for the maximum allowed by law for such services, $10, and in this precinct there were six officers.

On what principle the officers ask Los Angeles county to pay them the board is unable at the present time to clearly understand. Should it prove that Los Angeles county is required to pay the bills of the recent election, it will figure up a neat sum, at $60 a precinct. The bill is presented to the board by E. R. Swartell.

Was Not Drunk.

Mrs. Amanda Lauriux called at the TIMES office yesterday to say that she and her friend, Mary Mascarel, were not drunk when Officer McGurn arrested them day before yesterday. Amanda tells some hard stories on McGurn, and says she will have nothing to do with him since she has learned that he is a married man.

Sewall to Be Sent Again to Samoa.

Ensign Ormsby Ordered Dismissed From the Navy.

His Career as a "Sea Lawyer" Gets Him Into Trouble.

Several Consuls General Appointed by the President—Another Trip Down the Potomac—Other Washington News.

By Telegraph to The Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] The Examiner's Washington special says: It was reported today that the Adams would soon leave Mare Island for Samoa, and that ex-Consul-General Sewall will return to Apia on her as the United States representative at that point. There are strong influences at work to secure Mr. Sewall's reappointment, among others Senator Frye and Secretary Blaine. It is believed the Adams will sail about the 1st of July next.

AN OFFICER DISGRACED.

Ensign Ormsby Dismissed from the Naval Service.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] The case of Ensign George F. Ormsby, which was finally disposed of today by his dismissal from the naval service, is the first occurring in a number of years which has had that result. Ormsby was regarded in the service as a "sea lawyer," and had greatly vexed the department by his lawless and erratic conduct. The formal charges upon which he was tried by the court-martial were disobedience of orders and disrespect toward the Secretary and Acting Secretary of the Navy. It appears from the record that when he was ordered from Richfield Springs, and later from Cincinnati, to join the Monongahela, then under orders to proceed to Samoa, he pleaded illness, and, when the department refused to accept this excuse, he disregarded his orders, proceeded South and asked to have his resignation accepted. In some of his letters addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, he claims that he was being humiliated contrary to the Revised Statutes, and requested the Secretary either to leave the decision of his case to the civil courts, where he had begun an action looking to a revocation of his orders, or to a court-martial. Subsequently he was found at Los Angeles, Cal., placed under arrest and conveyed to Mare Island, where he was tried by a court-martial.

In one of his letters Ormsby says Commodore Harmony, the Acting Secretary, has made untrue and scandalous statements about his case which were contrived to serve as false evidence before the medical board. This failing of its purpose, the Ensign next attacked Secretary Whitney directly, charging him with neglect or omission to carry out the laws and regulations, and with stopping him from prosecuting his lawsuit to a just conclusion by ordering him away from the country.

On all of the charges and specifications the court-martial found him guilty, and upon the Secretary's approval of the sentence the President today formally dismissed Ensign Ormsby from the naval service.

PACIFIC COAST.

TWO MYSTERIOUS TRAGEDIES IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Seattle Still Relying on the Citizen Soldiery for Protection—Bad Outlook for California Wine-Makers.

By Telegraph to The Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] A young woman named Lena Davis was found in a room of a lodging-house on Stockton street this afternoon with a bullet wound below her left nipple. A pistol was found on the floor by her side. She said a thick-set man entered the room, and, after shooting her, locked the door, and escaped by the window. The bullet passed through her body. It was cut out of her back. The Police Surgeon says there is but little hope of her recovery.

Mr. Davis, the woman's husband, was notified of the affair and visited her at the hospital. He seemed much affected at the fate of his wife, and gave as his opinion that she became tired of life and committed the deed herself.

ANOTHER MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR.

Early this morning a man giving the name of James E. Connors was brought to St. Mary's Hospital by two unknown men. He was suffering from wounds which his friends said had been received by being run over by a train near Baden Station. His left arm and right leg were amputated at the hospital, and this afternoon the man died from loss of blood. The men who brought him to the hospital have not yet been heard from.

THE VINTAGE.

Rather a Dubious Outlook for the Wine-makers.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] Reports from the vineyard districts promise a large grape crop this year. So far no great damage has been done by pests or insects. Indications are that low prices for grapes and wine will continue to rule. Last year's vintage is rapidly passing into consumption. San Francisco, most of it being reshipped to eastern and other markets by rail and sea. Since the first of the year over 5,000,000 gallons has been shipped. Nearly half of the year's vintage is still in the hands of the producers.

CHICAGO, June 15.—James M. Donahue, president of the San Francisco and North Pacific road, in conversation with a reporter tod y, said: "There are apprehensions that this year's wine product in California will have to be sacrificed at a loss of 30 per cent. or more to the wine-dealers of San Francisco. In Sonoma county, the great wine district, every cellar is full, and as the present prices are far below cost, the outlook is not promising for producers."

Mysterious Death of a Noted Chicago Man.

An Arkansas Grand Jury Indicts Several Election Crooks.

Great Havoc Caused by Lightning in the Middle and New England States—The Lindauer Litigation.

By Telegraph to The Times.

ST. CLOUD (Minn.), June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] Swan Magnusson, who was shot at Mille Lacs, was brought here yesterday and placed in the hospital. Magnusson says that he has always been on the best of terms with the Indian, Wadena, who did the shooting, and he is at a loss to account for the attack upon him, except that Wadena was crazy drunk. Wadena called him to the door at midnight on Wednesday night, and without a word fired upon him.

Credible reports brought here this afternoon from Mora are to the effect that Magnusson was the only person injured, and the wild, sensational reports had but little or no foundation.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—At the War Department, it is said, there is no fear of a general outbreak of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, as the present difficulty appears to be of a personal nature.

LIGHTNING'S WORK.

Great Damage to Property in Several States.

NEW YORK, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] Associated Press dispatches from New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Eastern Pennsylvania, New York State and New England as far east as Maine, indicate extensive damage to property and some loss of life by storms, accompanied by lightning, this evening.

In this city a Catholic church spire was struck, the cupola stripped away, and stones weighing 300 pounds displaced.

An oil tank in Jersey City was struck by lightning and the flames from 200,000 gallons of petroleum have been blazing much of tonight. No lives were lost.

Another fire from the same cause occurred in the lumber district, but was headed off.

From all parts of the affected territory comes news of damage to crops and fruit trees.

ELECTION FRAUDS.

Indictments Returned by an Arkansas Grand Jury.

MEMPHIS (Tenn.), June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] The United States Grand Jury which has been investigating the manner in which elections in the Tenth Congressional District have been conducted during the past four years, submitted a report to the court this morning. Indictments were returned against nearly all the judges and clerks, some 200 in number, of the last election in this Congressional district. The particular offense for which most of these men are indicted is for not returning the poll list and count to the Clerks of the County and Circuit Courts of their respective counties as the law requires. The remainder of them are indicted for taking election books away from polling places to conduct the count.

A CHICAGO SENSATION.

Sudden Death of a Well-Known Citizen.

CHICAGO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] James M. Gamble, a wealthy real-estate dealer of this city, was found dead in his bed at the Palmer House this afternoon. The indications are that he reached the apartments during the previous night partially intoxicated, and, either by mistake or with suicidal intent, swallowed a bottle full of carbolic acid.

Gamble was a bachelor and has been a figure in several sensational affairs, notably one in which he broke a leg in jumping from the window of rooms occupied by a married woman as her husband entered.

Friends of the deceased insist that there was no reason for suicide, adding that his business is in very good shape.

WILL SUE THE JUDGE.

The Tables Turned in the Lindauer Litigation.

CHICAGO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] The Supreme Court of Illinois today reversed in effect the noted decision of Judge Prendergast of Chicago in the big Lindauer litigation. Judge Prendergast in that case enunciated for the first time the principle that the preferring of certain creditors by confessing judgments in their favor amounted in law to a voluntary assignment. It is intimated that Lindauer Bros. and Bernard Kuppenheimer, who was first appointed their receiver, will sue Judge Prendergast for trespass. Kuppenheimer, it will be remembered was sent to jail for 24 hours for disobeying Prendergast's order in the matter.

NOT HELD.

Possession of Stolen Things Not Proof of Theft.

Charles Campbell, arrested some days ago by Detective Glass while trying to sell a couple of sets of harness that had been stolen, and locked up on a charge of burglary, was yesterday discharged by Justice Owen, who held that the evidence did not warrant holding him. It was proven that the harness was the property of C. M. Wells, who lives out on Ocean View avenue; that his barn had been broken into after it had been locked up for the night; that in the morning the harness was missing, and that the next seen of the property it was in the possession of Campbell, who was trying to sell it for much less than it was worth. Campbell claimed on his trial that he purchased the harness from a Mexican, which was corroborated by his wife and another Mexican named Ballestero. Judge Owens stated that the Supreme Court of the State had decided that possession of stolen property was not proof of theft, and, as he thought a jury would not convict in the present case, thought that the people should not be put to the trouble and expense of trying Campbell before the Superior Court.

The Bank Commissioners.

J. A. Thompson and W. W. Moreland of San Francisco and J. W. Potts of this city, State Bank Commissioners, who are now in this city on a tour of inspection, report that all banks are in a healthy condition and doing a good business. Deposits have fallen off somewhat, but the cause is easily explained, by the discontinuance of the rush to this part of the State, and is not a bad sign. There are about 150 State banks, 35 National banks and 30 private banks in the State, but the commissioners only officially examine the State banks, although the others submit reports as a matter of courtesy. After leaving here the commissioners will visit all banks in Orange, San Bernarnino and San Diego counties.

The American Delegates Overwhelmed with Congratulations.

Boulanger's Opponents Arranging to Prosecute Him Again—Trainmen Arrested for Causing the Armagh Disaster.

By Telegraph to The Times.

BERLIN, June 15.—[Copyright, 1889, by the New York Associated Press.] The American delegates to the Samoan conference are much complimented on the result of their labors. William Walter Phelps is regarded by every one as the coming United States Minister, though he himself denies that he has been offered the position. The official press is disinclined to dwell upon the matter of the Samoan settlement, all the glory of which is lost to Germany, and a brief paragraph in the North German Gazette, on the conclusion of the conference, states that the agreement was arrived at with perfect unanimity by the powers represented and to the satisfaction of all parties concerned.

Today being the anniversary of the death of Emperor Frederick, memoral services were held in the Friedenkirche at Potsdam, which were attended by a large concourse, including all the members of the royal family.

A passenger testified that when the train stopped on the bridge, Moorehead placed a stone under the wheel of the last carriage and uncoupled the jumper on the carriage. The detached portion immediately descended the grade at a rapid rate. The doors of all the cars were locked.

McGrath and Moorhead were released on bail.

A CHILD'S PRAYER.

A Three-year-old Decides a Case in Court.

[Fresno Cor. San Francisco Chronicle, June 7.]

There arrived in this city from San Francisco yesterday morning a young man accompanied by a middle-aged woman and two children. They went to the Grand Central Hotel, where they registered as Duliss Bayswater, sister and children, and were assigned rooms. During the day the party went into the country and returned toward evening, accompanied by William Chrisman, who for the past two years has been foreman for Dr. Eshelman. The two young men were around the hotel together in the evening, and about 8 o'clock went up to the room of Mrs. Bayswater, who was registered as the sister of the younger man.

About 11 o'clock the guests of the hotel were aroused by a terrible noise in the lady's room, and it was discovered that the brothers were fighting, for brothers the two young men proved to be. One of them, the eldest, was taken to jail, and the younger one was allowed to remain at the hotel.

Complaints were filed against both boys for disturbing the peace before Recorder Prince, and this morning at 10 o'clock they had their trial. The testimony developed a sad story of domestic strife, and in brief it was as follows: The names of the young men are William and Duliss Chrisman, and that of the woman Bayswater. Some eight years ago William Chrisman met her and fell in love with her. She was a grass widow, her divorced husband being alive, and when Chrisman and Mrs. Bayswater went to get married they told their story, being Catholics, and the priest refused to marry them, Catholics not allowing the marriage of a divorced man or woman. This apparently made no difference to Mrs. Bayswater and Chrisman, and they went to living together as man and wife. She bore him two children, both girls, and they lived happily together until two years ago, when Chrisman left her.

Mrs. Bayswater keeps a tavern at 810 Townsend street, San Francisco. After leaving her Chrisman went to work for Dr. Eshelman and has continued in his employ. On one or two occasions the woman has come here, begging Chrisman to go back to her, and this was the purpose of this visit, the brother accompanying her to beg his brother to do right and return to his children. In a dispute which arose the lie was passed and a fight ensued.

In court today William Chrisman seemed to be bitter against his brother and the mother of his children. He accused her of keeping a dive and she denied it vehemently, retorting with other accusations. This was kept up until finally the mother said, in answer to some charge made by Chrisman: "Don't believe him, Judge. I have raised my children as they should be."

This was all Recorder Prince wanted, and he said, "I'll test it, madame," and turning to the youngest girl, a little tot no more than 3 years old, he said: "Can you say your prayers?"

Then ensued a most touching scene. The little girl without a word climbed from her chair, knelt on the floor of the courtroom, with the policemen, spectators, Judge and her father and mother around her, and, folding her tiny hands and lifting her eyes to heaven, she made the grandest defense of a mother's word possible. Slowly, but distinctly, and without a tremor in her voice, the innocent darling, born with the stain of shame upon her and discarded by her father, she lisped in childish accents the Lord's Prayer.

As she proceeded, utterly oblivious to her surroundings and thinking only of him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not," as she uttered that prayer which many in the room had uot yeard for years, strong men bowed their heads and sobbed aloud. Finishing her prayer she added: "God bless papa and mamma and UncleDuliss, amen," and rose from her knees.

The case was settled, and had William Chrisman sworn a thousand oaths that his wife was bad he would have been disbelieved. It was several minutes before any one spoke, and then the Recorder fined the two brothers $15 each and dismissed the court.

Sunday Rest for Railroad Hands.

[New York Press.]

The laudable movement of the New York Central road to restrict the running of freight trains on Sunday is leading to similar action elsewhere. The Grand Trunk and the Boston and Maine, both large railroad systems, have ceased running Sunday freight trains except for live stock or perishable merchandise, which demand the most rapid transportation possible. The desire to restrict Sunday work to this basis is rapidly extending to other lines, and we may yet hope to see a general agreement to limit this class of Sunday labor. Public sentiment will eagerly welcome the change, because it is a step toward the proper observance of the Sabbath. It cannot but work to the advantage of the laborer, physically and morally. No class of workmen, except possibly seamen, are subject to so great exposure and hardship, especially in the winter season, as the employés on our freight trains, and in no calling is the actual danger to life greater.

Foraker Must Accept if Called.

[Newark American, Lieut.-Gov. Lyon's Paper.]

All the nonsensical talk going the rounds of the press about the candidacy of Gov. Foraker for a third term is the silliest kind of trash. If the Republicans of Ohio want the Governor as their candidate they have a perfect right to nominate him and demand his services. As things are now going, they may conclude it the best thing to do, and if they so conclude he will be elected with a whirl. He has made a gallant chief executive, has managed the State finances with marked ability and given the office he fills a prominence in tone and character that at once commands the respect and admiration of the whole country. If the people want him they will call him, and he will be compelled to respond. What is wanted, must and will be had, is a candidate the people want.

A Couple of Clerical Anecdotes.

[Lynchburg Virginian.]

The Rev. Dr. Tomkins [illegible] is perennial in humor as he is in goodness. One of his anecdotes in the Episcopal Council was that during a flood in the Ohio Valley a relief boat went to a submerged house and found the thriftless owner penned up in the second story. Supplies were handed in to him through an upper window, when he broke forth, "Thank the Lord. I don't know what I would have done but for this blessed flood." Another was where a good Methodist brother had preached about the benefits of humility and poverty, and when he called on one of his devout flock to lead in prayer the latter turned the doctrine of the sermon on his astonished pastor in this unexpected manner: "Lord, you keep him humble and we'll keep him poor."

A Permanent World's Fair.

[New York Sun.]

The success of the French Universal Exposition has led some of the Paris papers to speak of reopening it next year. As a matter of fact, why should not a universal exposition like that of this year be established as one of the permanent institutions of Paris? There would certainly be no difficulty in securing all the exhibitors and all the novelties that could be desired, and it cannot be doubted that the multitude of strangers who are always pouring into Paris would be enlarged through the attractive power of the permanent show. A large number of French industries also would be sure to gain advantages from the carrying out of this suggestion.

Mr. Wanamaker and Profit-sharing.

[New York World.]

John Wanamaker two years ago adopted the plan of dividing the profits of his Philadelphia beehive among his employés, in lieu of increasing wages. On Friday night he met his 3000 work people and distributed $104,000 in checks. In a speech he said: "I regret to admit that I do not see much that has been gained by the experiment we have made except the satisfaction of making the effort and the pleasure there is in the giving to you a share in our returns." Mr. Wanamaker holds that his cooperative plan has not been a success, and he proposes to appoint a committee of his clerks to devise something better. Last year's distribution amounted to $409,000.

The Ohio Man Too Numerous.

[Bellaire Tribune.]

If the damphools would quit claiming every man as an Ohio man who has ever slept one night in the State and obtained notoriety afterward in some other State, there might be some show for a man who has lived in the State until he grew to manhood. As the great interstate railroads pass through Ohio about everybody in the West is an Ohio man to the extent of one night in the State.

DANGEROUS PURGATIVES.

A City Policeman's Very Peculiar Experience.

Mineral pills and drastic purgatives so irritate the mucous coatings of the stomach and bowels, that they often leave the system in worse condition than before. In fact their cathartic action is due to their irritation. The danger attending their steady use is apparent. The new laxative principle in Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla gets its cathartic action by increasing the mucous secretions and gently stimulating the stomach. It is purely vegetable, does not lose its effect, is effective and absolutely safe to be taken occasionally or continuously.

Gus Videau, the well known police officer of No. 1826 Howard St. San Francisco, writes: "After my own experience I firmly believe that Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla will cure the most obstinate cases of constipation. Although cured I am still taking it and never had my system so thoroughly regulated. By increasing or diminishing the dose one has absolute command over himself with this valuable remedy."

ON MONDAY, JUNE 17th,

Inaugurate One of the Greatest

BARGAIN SALE OF PARASOLS!

Ever Witnessed in the City.

This sale will continue until June 22, giving the out of town people a chance to attend this sale. Our present prices are as low as the very lowest, quality considered; but this week we propose to break the lowest record by placing our mammoth stock upon the market at a 20 per cent. discount, which means one-fifth (1-5) off our regular price. During this week nothing reserved in this stock. All new styles and no auction trash.

We have never made a business of making discount sales, but having from 700 to 900 styles it is impossible to describe them as well as publish the seven to nine hundred prices. We mean to make our prices through this entire stock uniformly low, so we adopt this discount sale. Never has there been as fresh and clean a stock of Parasols offered in Los Angeles at a sale or at as low prices since its history as a city as now. If you don't attend this sale you will surely regret it. By extremely low prices we not only boom this department but the entire house.

We are still ahead, and intend not only to keep prices down on good dry goods, but also to give the poor a chance to buy high-grade goods as well as the rich. We have always contended for a genuine article, genuine bargains and genuine treatment. Our aim in this sale is to double our business and to make our profits on the aggregate.

We never have and never will buy auction goods, believing them high at any price. It gives us great pleasure to be able to offer the great thinking people of Southern California so choice, so genuine a stock of Parasols. As we wish to emphasize, NO TRASH, NO AUCTION GOODS, will you come and look?

DUDE WILLIAMS.

HE WILL PROBABLY BE IN LOS ANGELES TODAY.

When He Will Be Given the Hospitality of the County—Mrs. Padelford's Name Unwarrantably Used—A Full Statement from Mr. Gorham, of Boston.

Owing to some hitch in the programme Williams, the festive young man who got to Mr. Maynes's collar to the extent of $500, did not get in from San Francisco last night, as was expected, but will arrive this morning, if nothing happens, in charge of Deputy Sheriff Wray.

During his stay in the City Prison at San Francisco, Williams was interviewed at some length by an Examiner reporter, and indulged in some rather mean remarks about Mr. Maynes, to the effect that that gentleman was indebted to him for certain social courtesies, all of which Mr. Maynes denies.

Mrs. Padleford, the opera singer, was also handled rather roughly by the Examiner, and a lot of stuff purporting to be her private history, more or less correct, was given. It is said that she contemplates a libel suit, but this is probably only an advertising dodge, and will come to nothing.

From persons in this city who knew Williams in Vicksburg, Miss., it is learned that his true name is Sanguinetti. His father died when he was quite young, and he was adopted by his aunt, Mrs. Williams, who took him to Jackson to live. His mother afterward married a man named Blake, which accounts for his going by that name. The fellow, while poor, is well connected, numbering among his relatives some of the best people in the section from which he hails.

There are quite a number of queer features about the whole case, which can only be explained by Williams in person, which he will probably do when he comes.

The following dispatch received last night explains the status of Williams fully:

MR. GORHAM'S STATEMENT.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 15.—[By the Associated Press.] A special to the Examiner from Boston says: Arthur Gorham, for forging whose name A. C. Williams was arrested in San Francisco, said today: "I have heard of him as A. D. Sankey and Albert Blake. When sick in a Kansas City hotel, without friends, he volunteered as nurse and I hired him. I paid him liberally, and later he asked me several times for aid, which I furnished him. Some two years ago he got in trouble in Chicago, and was sent to jail. He pleaded with me, and I succeeded in securing his release. From there he went West, and I suppose he has reached California without money and adopted those methods to raise it. I have helped the fellow several times, and this is his method of repaying me. I had a telegram from a bank in Kansas City, inquiring about a money order drawn on them by me, and I answered that I was in Boston and any draft on my account was forged. I had a telegram last week from my brother in Denver, asking if I was here, and saying that a telegram signed with my name had been received from San Francisco. So the fellow has been using my name out there. He has telegraphed my brother here under the names Arthur Gorham and H. Gorham, asking where I was, but they were not answered. The fellow is queer, and, I think, insane, but I will not do anything more for him."

Mr. Gorham is not very well, and is remaining very quiet at his brother's house, and expects to go west in a few days.

SEATTLE.

Opinion of a Gentleman Just From There.

N. C. Burch of this county returned from the fire-smitten city of Seattle, Wash., where he has been sojourning for nearly a year past, to his home at Tropico Friday morning. Speaking of the great fire, Mr. Burch says that in the immediate presence of it the disaster seemed overwhelming, and doubtless would have been to a less spirited and energetic people than they upon whom it fell. He believes that in a year's time the city will have fully recovered from the shock its commercial interests have sustained; that in five years' time it will have been thoroughly and substantially rebuilt, and will eventually emerge from the present wreck a grander city than ever it could have hoped to be, dwarfed and disfigured as it was by the old shacks of buildings of its business quarters. These the fire has effectually cleared away.

Supervisors.

The Board of Supervisors met yesterday and held a short session.

The Auditor was authorized to redeem the outstanding bonds of San Bernardino school district, to save interest yet to accrue, the holder of the bonds having agreed to the redemption.

The bid of William Beddome for $2000 bonds of the old river school district at par was accepted.

The Clerk was instructed to request Auditor Hamlin to cancel the appointment of F. Lauterio as Deputy Auditor, and have him turn over his keys.

Orange County.

The Supervisorial districts of the new county of Orange, as fixed by the commissioners, are as follows:

No. 1—Santa Ana, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4.

No. 2—Garden Grove, Westminster, New Hope and Santa Ana No. 5.

No. 3—Anaheim, West Anaheim (Fairview), Yorba and St. James.

No. 4—Orange, West Orange (Orange Depot), El Modena, Silverado and Santa Ana No. 2.

No. 5—Tustin, San Juan, Trabuco, Laguna and Newport.

CRAZIES.

An Opium Fiend and a Woman Who Pops the Question.

Two cranks were examined before Judge McKinley yesterday. Louis Silverstein was remanded to jail after examination, to come before the commissioners again June 19. He is very incoherent, and seems to be a victim of opium. He had a quantity of documents on which was a jumble of Chinese and English characters.

Minnie J. Hinton was also examined and committed to Stockton. Her lunacy is of a peculiar kind, and seems to have reversed the order of her sex as far as matrimonial proceedings are concerned. It has been her habit to wander about the streets for some time past, and whenever she passed any man that struck her disordered fancy, ask him forthwith to marry her. The woman is 40 years old and respectable in appearance, and her manifestly-crazy demeanor caused her arrest. There is no harm in her, but she acts in a very silly, simpering manner. Several gentlemen whose good looks are only exceeded by their modesty and fear of womankind in general have been suddenly sought in marriage by the old lady in the manner described, and scared half to death. In all other respects the demented creature is not particularly cranky, the only difference between her and some of the rest of the sex being that she imagines she wants to get married and says so, and they want to but don't dare say so. In the courtroom the patient seemed determined to make a dead-set at the Court, but he warily kept his distance and did not give her a chance. The sight of the poor woman so laboring with a disordered mind was quite pathetic.

REV. JAMES.

His Divorce Case Goes Over—Promised Developments.

The Rev. James of Long Beach was in the city yesterday, his long black coat all buttoned down before. The divorce suit brought against him by Mrs. James was set for trial before Judge Clark in Department No. 2 of the Superior Court, but went over on account of the Banta will case.

Just before court convened in the afternoon he entered the courtroom and hurriedly asked Clerk Ashmore if the James divorce case was likely to come up, and upon being told that it would not, pulled his hat over his eyes, and slid out the courtroom like a shot out of a gun. It is understood that he proposes to fight the case to bitter end, and there will probably be some very racy testimony when it comes to trial.

MILITARY MATTERS.

Helping to Celebrate the Fourth—Must Muster.

In compliance with the Political Code all the companies composing the First Brigade, N.G.C., will be ordered to parade July 4th. During next month every organization must be mustered; the Brigade Commander and staff, Signal Corps and cadet companies, as well as the regular companies mustering rolls must be made out and handed to the mustering officer at the time of the muster. The Brigade Commander will fix the days for muster. Company commanders should read carefully General Order No. 12, Headquarters, May 22, 1889.

Old Man Bender.

Fritz Bender, the old man who beat up the baker, Charley Dahl, with a chair for being too familiar with his wife, remained in the City Prison all yesterday until late in the afternoon, when he was brought before Justice Stanton, and his examination was set for Wednesday next. Bail was fixed at $1000, which he gave, and was released from custody. A great deal of sympathy is felt for the old fellow, and quite a number of his friends were on hand to greet him on his release.

Pedestrianism Comes High.

A $20,000 damage suit was begun yesterday against the Los Angeles Cable Railway Company by R. C. Guirado. He alleges that June 9th he was riding on the line from the intersection of the lines at Fort and Fourth streets to Spring streets, and had paid his fare, when he was ejected from the car.

PASADENA NEWS.

THE COUNCIL AGAIN TALK RAPID-TRANSIT.

A Full Report of the Proceedings—Railroad Ties—Postoffice Gleanings—Here and There—Police Nuggets—Local and Personal Mention.

PASADENA, June 15.—[Correspondence of THE TIMES.] The City Council met in regular session at 10 o'clock this morning. After the reading of the minutes the regular order of business was suspended.

John Cross, E. F. Spence, Judge Storey and a large delegation of citizens were on hand to take part in the railroad discussion.

The question of the application of John Cross to extend his line across Vineyard street was taken up, and only laid back on the table after an animated discussion.

H. P. Hyatt was the first of the Grievance Committee to address the board, protesting against the crossing of the street. He quickly gave way, only to rise again in a 10-minute speech.

Dr. Elliott, who owns a lot on the street, also protested strongly against the amendment, and referred the board to an assertion which had gone abroad that G. G. Green had purchased the sewer bonds with the understanding that the board would not grant a franchise to any person or corporation to cross the street.

This remark irritated Councilman McLean, and he repudiated any such statement as far as he was concerned or in his knowledge, the board had made.

Councilman Young then jumped to his feet, and said he was not only of the opinion the board had agreed to such a protest, but he wanted to be put on record opposing the amendment if it damaged private property as, in his manner of looking at it, appeared that way.

A. G. Throop, the venerable Councilman from the West Side, then took the floor, and in few words denied the board had made any pledges such as charged. A railroad in the business center would not hurt business or private property; neither would it affect its value, but rather increase it. Said he, emphatically, G. G. Green took those bonds as a business transaction, because he knew he would make money by purchasing them.

Stephen Townsend said that he was not prepared to vote on the amendment, but notwithstanding the fact he had had six weeks to make up his mind, the question was finally laid over until Monday afternoon.

The petition for an amendment to the San Gabriel Valley Rapid Transit Railroad was also discussed, but shared the fate of its predecessor by going over for further consideration.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The City Council met, pursuant to adjournment, at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

President Parker was in the chair, and all the members present.

The Committee on Auditing and Finance recommended the purchase of a $215 safe. The report was withdrawn and the committee empowered to act.

On motion, the City Attorney was instructed to draw up a contract for sixteen lights additional, at $10 per night, with the Pasadena Electric Light and Power Company.

McLean, of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, recommended the Carlton bakery purchase be not made, and the instructions to the president be revoked. So ordered.

The Committee on Fire and Water reported the Silsby engine was on the way, payment to be made in city bonds.

The Building Committee recommended the purchase of a lot in depth not less than 120 feet and having a frontage of not less than 35 feet, payment to be made in municipal bonds at par. On motion the Clerk was instructed to advertise for sealed bids to furnish such a lot, either by lease or deed.

Councilman Throop moved that the Clerk be instructed to advertise for 1000 feet of hose suitable for fire engine purposes. So ordered.

Bids for furnishing cement and lime were ordered opened and read. Honlahan & Griffith agree to furnish 100 barrels of cement at $5.78, and lime at $2.18 on board cars at this city. On motion, rejected.

POLICE NUGGETS.

Justice Van Doren has gone to Mount Wilson to rusticate.

One more arrest was made today for violation of the anti-saloon ordinance.

Informer Case is a frequent visitor to the courtroom and Council chamber nowadays.

Not a single arrest for riding on the sidewalks today. It is "strange."

RAILROAD TIES.

Complaint is made that a number of youths are in the habit of jumping on trains near the depot.

The regular train for those wishing to spend the day at Redondo leaves at 8:50 o'clock tomorrow.

A new train has been put on to reach this city every morning at 8:37 o'clock, excepting Sunday, from Los Angeles.

The change in time-table goes into effect on Monday. After tomorrow the theater train will be discontinued, [illegible] substituted to leave each evening, Sundays excepted, at 6:25 o'clock. Not much of an improvement, as it is too near dining time.

HERE AND THERE.

The Board of Trade did not meet this afternoon, in the absence of a quorum.

The boulevard project is still being actively discussed by many members of the Board of Trade.

The proceeds of the "kettle-drum" given by Mrs. E. B. Dexter at her elegant home last evening amounted to over $50. It will be given to the home poor. A sensible conclusion.

The Pasadena Union today passed into the hands of J. W. Wood and W. U. Masters, who have been the principal owners. No change will be made in the management.

The Council has not as yet ordered paid the bill of $25 presented to Clerk Cambell by Informer Case. Who ordered the liquor sneak work will crop out later.

Bellan & Co., who have been in the drug business in this city for many years, are making preparations to remove to Los Angeles. This is only the beginning of a long ending. A report was also circulated on the streets this afternoon that the Standard office would be removed to that city, but this could not be verified.

PERSONAL.

C. C. Reynolds was noticed on the street this morning.

Judge Storey of Alhambra lunched at the St. Nicholas today.

Mr. Walton, of the one-time firm of Winters & Walton, came up on the overland this morning.

The Misses Diers and Junkin are spending a few days at Santa Monica.

P. G. Wooster and family left this afternoon to spend the summer at their elegant cottage on Catalina Island.

Officer McGurn Suspended.

Officer McGurn, who figured in the affair with the two women on New High street, Thursday evening, an account of which was published in THE TIMES yesterday morning, was yesterday suspended by Chief Burns for five days. The specific charge against the officer is that he left his beat while on duty, but it is believed that the women accused him of coming to their houses and trying to effect an entrance, for improper purposes. McGurn denies that he ever did anything of the kind, and says that it is a piece of spite-work on the part of the women—in fact, that one of them threatened to get even with him if he dared to put her under arrest. The case will be investigated by the commissioners, and if he can prove his innocence, as he thinks he can, the officer will be reinstated.

Barber Supplies and Cutlery Grinding by Steam.

Another eastern house opens a branch in Los Angeles. Los Angeles, a city of about 80,000 population and flourishing surrounding towns, has now its barber supply house. Gust Knecht, 36½ South Spring street (up stairs), is the enterprising man who does his share in putting our southern metropolis in rank with eastern commercial centers. Mr. Knecht, a well-known business man of Chicago and a [illegible] has opened a branch of his Chicago house. The unrivalled success of his past is a guarantee to a prosperous future in this very line on the Pacific Coast.

The greater part of his goods are manufactured by his Chicago house and part of them are manufactured here on the above-named premises. There is now a man here who understands how to put barbers' cutlery in the best of shape. He has a perfect cutlery and razor concave grinding, has his own engine and also takes in jobs of all kinds of grinding; to fix in a workman-like manner razors for self shaving, tailor shears and all kinds of edge tools. We wish Mr. Knecht the best success in his enterprise, and would like to see many more real manufacturing and value-producing establishments added to the above house in our great city, which is otherwise favored with the most glorious climate on earth.

ATTENTION!
Cheap Land -:- Good Land.

Dr. E. T. Barber of Lancaster, Antelope Valley, Los Angeles county, Cal., offers 30,000 acres of land for sale, in tracts of 20 acres and upward, at $5 to 50 per acre, with liberal terms and title guaranteed.

This valley has raised the premium wheat of the world; sugar beets at the rate of 21 tons to the acre; barley hay, three tons; eight crops of alfalfa in one year; parsnips seven inches in diameter, and is competent to compete with Spain for raisins, and France for champagne.

All this land offered can be covered with mountain water, and has good surface and artesian water, and much of it has a subsoil irrigation.

The railroad facilities are good: the Southern Pacific Railroad now crosses it, and three other great railroads are expected to do so in the near future.

Climate good—no cyclones, blizzards, fogs or malaria.

Antelope Valley is the hope of the poor, a boon to men of moderate means, and a bonanza to keen-sighted business men.

The Times Annual Trade Number.

The Times. The Times.

Now Ready, and for sale by Carriers, Newsboys, News Agents, and at the Counter.

ANNUAL TRADE NUMBER,

—CONTAINING—

A COMPLETE REVIEW OF THE YEAR.

Fifty-six Large Pages. Equivalent to a Two Hundred Page Book.

The Annual Trade Number of THE TIMES, now ready, is the most complete and interesting publication of that character ever published in Los Angeles.

NOTABLE FEATURES—It contains a business review of the year, embracing a great mass of valuable facts bearing on the city and county; a thorough exposition of our natural resources—mineral, vegetable, commercial and climatic; a review of the rise and progress of the boom, with solid proofs that the country is now in better condition than it was during the height of the real-estate excitement; a carefully compiled exposition of the varied inducements which Southern California offers to the health-seeker, the home-seeker and the tourist, besides a number of interesting and valuable special articles on pertinent subjects. It contains more solid information about the country than could be crowded into the compass of a hundred long letters, and for a few cents and the expenditure of a few minutes' time in writing the address you can send a friend more information than you could write in a month, even if you had all the facts at hand. For a dollar you can supply ten families in the frozen East with information that may lead them to join the army of pilgrims to Southern California, to their own and this country's advantage. Thus, whether viewed from the standpoint of friendship or self-interest, it will be seen that no better use can be made of a dollar than by purchasing the requisite ten copies of the great Annual Trade Number of THE TIMES. Not one-tenth of the pleasure can be bestowed in any other way for the same amount of money.

JUNE THE 16TH.

NOTABLE EVENTS THAT HAVE OCCURRED ON THIS DATE.

Hugo the Great—Battle of Fort Beau Sejour—The First Duke of Marlborough—Bishop Butler—The Battle of Stoke.

Hugo the Great, father of Hugh Capet, founder of the third line of French kings, died June 16, 956. Clovis, the ancester of the first line, had been the author of two matters, which have endured fourteen centuries, the French Monarchy and Christian France. But his descendants, the sluggard kings, gave way to the Pepins and Charlemagne, who had sought to revive the Roman Empire in his own person and aspired to be at one and the same time Cæsar, Augustus and Constantine. At length the race of Charlemagne rivaled that of Clovis in feebleness. Hugo the Great, however, resisted the temptation to seize the crown to which his abilities entitled him, and left it for his son, Hugh Capet, to found a line of kings.

THE BATTLE OF FORT BEAU SEJOUR.

Following the fight of May 28, 1754, at Great Meadows, Va., the second battle in the old French war was that of Fort Beau Sejour, of June 16, 1755. While Lord Boseawen was off Newfoundland, watching the movements of the French fleet, a force of 3000 men sailed from Boston for the Bay of Fundy. The troops were commanded by John Winslow, great-grandson of Edward Winslow of the Plymouth Colony, and grandson of the commander of the Colonial forces in the great swamp fight during King Phillip's war. The little army attacked Fort Beau Sejour and Gaspereau, which, being taken by surprise, were captured without resistance. By this action the French were expelled from the Bay of Fundy. What to do with the 15,000 French inhabitants of Nova Scotia was the problem solved by the British Government in the manner made familiar to all by Longfellow's "Evangeline."

THE FIRST DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

No British peer's name is more in the mouth of Americans than the Duke of Marlborough, whose American wife has recently been presented to the Queen. The illustrious founder of this ducal family, Sir John Churchill, first Duke of Marlborough, died June 16, 1722. He was born in Devonshire June 24, 1650, and became a page to the Duke of York at the age of 12. When 16 he was made an ensign, and in 1672 gained great distinction in the Netherlands under the Duke of Monmouth. When the Duke of York became James II., he made his former page a peer. Churchill favored the revolution which raised William III. to the throne, and he was made Earl of Marlborough and named commander of the English army in Holland. Subsequently, being detected in treasonable correspondence with James II., he was disgraced and confined in the Tower. But on the accession of Queen Anne he was restored to favor and entered upon that victorious career which places him among the ablest generals of all time. He never besieged a fortress without taking it, and never fought a battle he did not win. His greatest triumphs were those of Blenheim in 1704, Ramillies in 1706, Oudenarde in 1708, and Malplaquet in 1709.

BISHOP BUTLER.

Next to "Paley's Evidences of Christianity," the most celebrated defense of revealed religion is the "Analogy" of Bishop Joseph Butler, who was born in Berkshire, England, in 1692, and died June 16th, 1752. He was appointed Bishop of Bristol in 1738, and Bishop of Durham in 1750. His father was a shopkeeper and proposed to make him a minister of the Presbyterian Church. At the age of 22 Butler gave proof of high metaphysical ability, and about the same time made up his mind to join the Church of England. In 1736 Butler published his celebrated "Analogy," which, according to Dr. Chalmers, entitles him to be considered as the Bacon of theology. Butler's style was confessedly obscure, but when criticised on this ground the learned Bishop defended himself with the observation that obscurity might arise from two causes—the difficulty of the subject and the dullness of the reader, and intimated that the obscurity in his case was due to the latter cause.

THE BATTLE OF STOKE.

The last contest between the rival houses of York and Lancaster, was fought on June 16, 1587. The fortunes of the red rose prevailed, and the house of Tudor was firmly seated on the throne, but the destruction of life was excessive, 6000 men being numbered among the slain. The Earl of Lincoln and other noblemen commanded the Yorkist party, while Henry VII. defended in person his right to the throne. The struggle commenced by the Earl of Lincoln descending to the attack from a hill, hoping by a furious charge to break the first line of the King's army and thus throw the main body into confusion. But after fighting desperately for three hours, during which the German auxiliaries, under Swartz, exhibited great valor; and the Irish, under Fitzgerald, armed only with darts and knives, obstinately maintained their ground, the royal troops prevailed, and the insurgents were routed with immense slaughter. Lambert Simnel, the puppet set up by the Earl of Lincoln, to clear his own way to the throne, was captured and made turnspit in the King's kitchen. The Earl of Lincoln and the other chiefs were slain in battle.

Werst, the man accused of mayhem, for having bitten off the end of McTaggart's finger, was held to answer by Justice Lockwood yesterday morning, and his bail fixed at $500.

The citation against Fred McGregor to appear before Judge Cheney on the charge of contempt was continued by the Judge yesterday until August 5th, the defendant not having been found by the officers.

Ah Chung and nine other Chinamen, convicted of playing fan-tan, were in Justice Lockwood's court yesterday morning for sentence. There was a motion for a new trial, and sentence was continued until June 18th.

W. H. Wilson, proprietor of the local fireworks factory, complains that the Fourth of July Committee has ignored him in making its order, and propose to send to New York. He thinks that is not the way to encourage home industry.

The following were the arrivals at the County Jail yesterday: Mrs. M. J. Hinton, insane, city; Mrs. Isadora Salis, assault to murder, Wilmington; Andrew and Mary Clancy, disturbing the peace, city. At 7 o'clock last evening there were 90 prisoners in the tanks.

Ah Gee, a Chinaman, drew a big revolver on Fred H. Smith, at the Alisostreet bridge, yesterday afternoon, when Smith came in and swore out a complaint against him. Officer Manning went out and brought the heathen in, when he deposited $50 bail and was released.

Humane Officer Wright looked up the poor abandoned horse in the river bed near Kuhrts-street bridge yesterday, and found that the animal had been down on the sand a couple of days without food or water. As its condition was hopeless he shot it, and put it out of its misery.

Last night about 11 o'clock, as Officer Harvey was passing the corner of Walters and New High streets, he found John Nereny and E. R. Nance engaged in a fist-fight. Both men were brought to the police station, where they were, respectively bailed out by the only [illegible] depositing $20 each for

Mr. Roder, who was referred to as being on a spree with McTaggart the night he was so fearfully beaten by Werst, called at the TIMES office yesterday and stated that this was not the case. He was sleeping near by and happened in as a witness to the fight. He says he can name the man who was out drinking with McTaggart.

Marriage licenses were issued yesterday to the following persons: Jesus Maria Farcias, aged 27, Guadaloupe Chavez, aged 22, of Ballona; Asa Kemble, aged 43, and M. C. Martial, aged 35, of San Bernardino; Seraphim Rambaud, aged 34, of Puente, and Alphonsine Faure, aged 21, city; Charles H. Dana, aged 26, and Alice Mansfield, aged 24, city.

The Horticultural Commission yesterday made a tour of inspection through the Briswalter orchard and other properties in the southern suburbs. Owners of infected places were notified to clean them up, and if they do not do so the machinery of the law will be set in motion against them. One place belonging to Charles Workman has been thoroughly cleaned of scale.

W. R. Smith, who is in the County Jail under a bond, which he could not give, to keep the peace as far as his wife is concerned, was brought before Judge McKinley yesterday by habeas corpus proceedings. He attempted to secure his release on the ground of certain irregularities in the trial before the Justice of the Peace, but the Judge denied the motion and remanded him to jail.

Mrs. Wright and Mrs. Lowell wish to extend their thanks to the Odd Fellows for the use of their hall for the concert given Friday night in East Los Angeles for the benefit of the Seattle sufferers; also to Powell & Haskell for the piano, to Mr. Conor and orchestra and to all those who so kindly assisted. The proceeds of the concert amounted to $50, which was turned over to the TIMES fund for Seattle sufferers.

Last evening about 8 o'clock Mike Duffy got into a fight with Herman Gumberg, in the latter's saloon, at No. 26 Downey avenue, when both parties were pulled by Officer O'Reagan. Later a citizen from the vicinity of the saloon came in and reported that the place was a tough one; that a practice was made of selling liquor to minors, and that it should be looked after by the Police Commissioners, which will probably be done.

A divorce suit was partially heard yesterday by Judge Van Dyke, it being the case of Mrs. C. F. Finley vs. James F. Finley. The wife sues on the ground of intemperance on the part of the husband. They have a little daughter as the result of their union. Mrs. Finley alleges that her husband was so habitually intoxicated that she was forced to leave him a few months ago, because when in that condition he frequently assaulted her. The case will be concluded this week.

Yesterday afternoon a short, fat Mexican woman, with both eyes in deep mourning, was brought up from Wilmington, and locked up on a charge of assault to commit murder. She gave her name as Mrs. Isadora Salis, and said that she was an inmate of nigger Brown's dancehouse, in Stingray Gulch. In a drunken fight at the place, Friday night, she cut another woman named Big Rosa, in the arm, after the woman had knocked her down and was beating her. Isadora says that she did not have a knife in her hand at the time, and that she is a victim of a conspiracy.

DISEASES OF THE LUNGS.

We have introduced the compound oxygen treatment with our systems of practice in the cure of Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Dyspepsia, Insomnia, Sore Throat, Catarrh, Rheumatism and Nervous Prostration, while only the most improved methods are employed in all female complaints.

As is well known, Oxygen is the life-giving principle in the air we breathe, and Ozone in the air imparts that happy and buoyant feeling after thunder storms. Persons often require more oxygen than is in the air around them, and cause doors and windows to be opened, tear off collars, loosen the waist, and call for a fan to displace the stifling and bring fresher air or more oxygen. Traveling is done mainly to resorts where the air contains more oxygen, and mountains are ascended to breathe the Ozone, which is light and ascends from the earth.

Oxygen and Ozone are gases, and must be stored up and used by inhaling them. Our apparatus for storing and having these gases compounded with other suitable agents is perfect, and though they are not a cure-all, yet they are undoubtedly the greatest invention made in the last twenty years in any department of medicine, and the results are truly wonderful.

Oxygen acts by purifying the blood. Thereby increases the circulation, promotes absorption, improves digestion and assimilation, increases the capability of the lungs, and acts as a gentle stimulant to the nervous system.

The London, Eng., Lancet, very truthfully says: "The compound oxygen treatment is the greatest discovery of the nineteenth century." Clergymen, Statesmen, Lawyers, Doctors and all classes indiscriminately, wherever it is introduced, both use and recommend it.

The testimonials given below are very fair samples as to the time required for effecting cures in these troublesome cases:

Dr. Williams—DEAR SIR: I am happy to say that the cure you effected in me for a severe case of throat disease has proved to be permanent. For over a year I was troubled with post-nasal catarrh and granulated throat disease, and had done so much for it that I had but little hopes of ever being cured, when I first went to you, but you gave me such positive assurance that you could cure me that I began your treatment, and in four months from that time you discharged me as cured, and I am happy to say the cure was a permanent thing in every particular up to the present time, which is now over a year. Yours very truly. MRS. LUCY R. TRASK, 809 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Dr. M. Hilton Williams—DEAR SIR: I have been contemplating for some time past making a statement of my case and the benefit I have derived from your treatment, remembering how glad I would have been could I have seen something of the kind from a person in the city, to whom I could have referred, when I first came to Los Angeles from my home in New York State.

I had been suffering for several years with what various physicians in the East pronounced "chronic ulcerated laryngitis." I spent considerable time at the Clifton Sanitarium, and employed the best medical skill I could find, all without any permanent benefit, and as a last resort our family physician recommended Los Angeles. For a time I improved, and then I began to go backward and all my former symptoms returned.

Through a medical friend I was induced to try your treatment. I became very much discouraged at times, but persevered, as I felt almost desperate and knew of nothing else to turn to. My throat trouble being aggravated by a serious stomach difficulty, made it very obstinate to deal with, but at last, after persevering for a time with your remedies, I consider I am permanently cured. If this will be of any value to you you are at perfect liberty to use it; also to refer any one to my mother, my husband or myself. Very truly yours,

MRS. J. D. WILEY,

"DOPE FIENDS."

A TOUR OF INSPECTION THROUGH CHINATOWN.

Views of Mongols as They Appear at All Stages of the Game—How They Burn and Smoke the Drug, and How It Fascinates Them.

It has been well said that "knowledge is power." Hence the deduction that all knowledge, be it good or evil, is of benefit in some way to society. It is true that moralists and teachers of the gospel have cried down the publication in newspapers of the doings of the criminal classes, while men of the world have with one voice declared that the surest preventive of vice of all kinds is the exposure of its votaries in the daily press. Muzzle the press or wipe it out of existence and human nature sinks to the level of the brute creation. Murder, robbery and mob law run riot with each other, and the whole country is given up to evil-doers.

Conspicuous among the criminal classes of this country are the Chinese. The tendency of the Chinese to crime is especially great, and is well worthy the closest consideration of the moralist, the philanthropist, the philosopher and the historian, to say naught of the politician and lawmaker. The inner life of the Chinese is replete with mystery and superstition. Within the past century France has thrown off the yoke of tyranny; England and Germany, obeying the law of compulsion, have become limited inside of absolute monarchies, while Russia and China alone of the great powers of the Old World still adhere to the ancient and tyrannical rule of Czar and Emperor. Christianity and civilization have exerted but little influence with the people of these two nations, where slavery blooms and liberty perishes. Crime seems to be closely connected with the character of the Chinese, who, lacking in a sufficient degree of moral restraint, are generally but too willing, for a suitable consideration, to enter into any wicked scheme.

In this country the Chinese character is but little known, and many of the darker and most awful practices of [illegible] from the eyes of the Caucasians. The full extent and nature of the crimes committed in California by the Chinese are commonly unknown, except it may be to the special detectives and the press reporters, who have superior sources of information. A detailed recital of these crimes would make a volume equaling in dramatic incident any of the old romances, dreams or tragedies; rivaling in plot and sensation the record of the dreadful "Council of Ten," or the dark and cruel acts of the Inquisition. All of the crimes in the calendar, from misdemeanor to murder, have at divers times in the past been committed within the Chinese quarters of this city, and in a majority of these the identity of the felon has remained undiscovered. A trip through the filthy dens occupied by this strange people will convince the most casual observer that the Chinaman's facilities for covering up his tracks are greater than any other class of people. Even the shrewdest detectives are fooled and humbugged at will, and, unless a majority of the inhabitants of Chinatown desire to turn the criminal over to justice, the officer might just as well give up.

Not only do the Chinese revel in crime, but they delight to draw the detested white race down to their level, and that they have succeeded with certain classes in this country there is no doubt.

The Chinese criminal, be he high or low, is thoroughly devoted to the "bamboo," or opium pipe; and when he isn't "burgling" or doing something worse, he devotes his leisure hours to "hitting the dope" or training his white brother in the way he should not go.

No. 3—Something Wrong.

The opium habit was first introduced on this coast about 30 years ago, and it is hard today to find a white criminal, male or female, on this coast who is not a victim of the terrible opium habit.

The Legislature has fought this evil for years, and yet "John" goes on year after year adding victims to his death-dealing practice. Opium fiends are more numerous among the criminal classes than any other, although during the past few years the habit has reached out and has secured a strong foothold among the better classes. Chinese servants have taken the opium layout into the families of the upper crust, and it is not an uncommon thing to see its deadly signs on the cheeks and in the watery eyes of society's votaries. Young men and women, too, who have nothing to do but seek new pleasures, make willing victims, and the almond-eyed master of the kitchen is only too glad to give them the first lesson.

Much has been said on the subject of opium smoking, but it is a subject that will never be exhausted, and is always interesting to even those who have visited "opium joints," as the smoking places are called.

A few nights ago the TIMES artist, armed with his flash camera, and followed by a reporter and several sight-seers visited Chinatown. To reach an opium "joint" one has to wend his way through dark passage ways, braving a stench that has been aptly likened to "a mixture of sandalwood and fish." The party was determined to get a few opium views, and they were successful, as the cuts in this article will prove.

The first joint entered was a filthy little room, 8x10. Three or four "fiends" were sleeping in bunks that decorated the walls. A "layout," composed of a bamboo pipe, a small glass lamp, a steel wire about the length and size of a knitting-needle, a horn box for liquid opium, a pair of shears and a few matches, spread out on a common mat, rested on a larger mat, on which the fiend reclined. All of them except one had smoked themselves into a death-like sleep, and he was just preparing to partake of the deadly drug. The artist adjusted his camera and flashed the cap, with the result shown in picture No. 1.

The subject has probably just returned from a hard day's work in the home of some highly-respectable family, and from the self-satisfied smile on his ugly face it will be seen that he has made up his mind to enjoy himself. He has lighted the lamp and is just preparing the "pill." To make this simple operation plain to the uninitiated it will be necessary to describe the pipe.

No. 4—Trying again.

The pipe is made of a large bamboo, about eighteen inches long and one inch in diameter. It is plugged up at [illegible] mouth at the other. The bowl is placed about eight inches from the closed end of the bamboo. The bowl is made of light wood and the top is covered with skin, which is stretched as tight as a drumhead. In the center a small hole, just large enough to receive the wire or knitting-needle, is made. The smoker dips this needle into the liquid opium and gathers up a drop about the size of a pea, which he carefully burns and carefully rolls on the bowl until it is "cooked," or ready to be smoked. He then places it over the small hole in the bowl and runs the hot needle through it into the bowl. He is now ready to smoke. The bowl is placed to the lamp, with the open end of the bamboo in the heathen's mouth, and he takes three or four long puffs. Cut No. 2 shows him in the act of cooking the pill.

This is the most difficult feature of smoking, and a good "cooker" is in great demand among the white females who smoke opium. In this cut John is about ready to smoke his first pill, but before he is ready for the interesting operation he discovers that something is wrong with the pill, and it will be seen by examining cut No. 3 that the fear of losing his smoke has thrown a look of disappointment over his face that is truly painful.

For a few moments he struggles with the unruly bamboo, and the TIMES party look on with more than passing interest. It is a study to watch the fellow's face when he puts on his big horn eye-glasses, and goes to work on the pipe in earnest. Cut No. 4 shows him in the act of adjusting the pill a second time, and as he put the pipe to his lips and drew a long satisfactory whiff the party filed out.

No. 5—The ninth pipe.

Before he drops off to sleep, as has his partner, who is by his side, he will probably cook and inhale a dozen or twenty pills, according to the length of time he has been a victim of the habit.

Another joint was entered, and an old saddle-colored rascal was caught in the act of smoking his ninth pipe. It will be seen that he is growing quite drowsy, and is about ready to drop the bamboo and dream about the beauties of his distant home.

After visiting several other joints, the artist succeeded in getting a fiend who was on his last pill. His whole body shows that the drug has gained perfect control over him. In a few seconds he will drop the pipe, and for hours he will be in a deep sleep.

It is said who have experienced the sensation that the most beautiful dreams come to the smoker and for hours after he awakes he walks about in a kind of trance that makes him forgetful of his earthly surroundings. There is no other dissipation that is so fascinating, and when it once gets a hold on a person there is no human power that can shake it off. The victim is lost to this world, for when he is not smoking he is wandering about in a kind of drunken stupor that unfits him for any kind of business, or he is sleeping with his fairy-like dreams that draw him back to the pipe time after time, until death steps in and relieves the world of a vagabond who is much lower in the scale of humanity than the vilest drunkard that ever crawled out of the gutter.

And the Chinese are introducing this death-dealing habit into happy homes every day.

THE "RAZOR-BACK."

A Style of Hog Peculiar to Florida and Other Parts.

A correspondent of the Jacksonville Times-Union asks the editor of that paper the following question:

Can you show to the people wherein they will be benefited by the utter extinction of the "razor-back," when he is the only hog in Florida proof against cholera and other infectious diseases?

To which the editor responds:

The inquiry recalls a conversation held yesterday with an old-time Florida "cracker." He declared that the war waged against the "razor-back" was founded in ignorance; that it is not the fault of the "razor-back" that he is long, lean, lank and larcenous, but the fault of his master. He had taken up the half-starved animals from their range of sand (on which they were forced to subsist) and, after feeding them on corn, as other hogs are fed, had made large, fine stock of them. The owner himself would hardly know the breed, after two or three generations. Their sides fill out, their humped-up backs take on a straight, horizontal line, and even their snouts contract several inches. Take Kentucky thoroughbreds, hogs, cows or horses, turn them loose on Florida sand for a hundred years, and we should soon see nothing but scrubs and razor-backs. Let our razor-back owners pay half the attention and feed half the food to the home article that the "imported" stock gets, and the change would soon surprise everybody.

In order to demonstrate its "perfect fairness to all sections," including Florida, THE TIMES goes out of its way to give an illustration of the able "razor-back" hog, taken from life, and also an illustration of what the animal can be made by tender care, generous feeding and civilized culture. Look on this picture:

The "razor-back"—"Sibboy thar!"

And then look on this:

The "razor-back" renewed, regenerated and disenthralled.

THE TIMES now considers that it has done its duty by Florida. Bring on the next country with a grievance!

A Permanent Retirement.

[Pasadena Star.]

Gov. Waterman announces that he is a candidate for renomination. This will be a surprise to the State, as he had declared that he did not wish to be reëlected. It requires no prophet to declare that he will be retired permanently at the close of the present term.

Written for The Times.

Johnstown.

Fire and flood. God! what a sight.
Maddened humanity; vain is their flight;
Husbands and wives torn rudely asunder,
Little children in terror and wonder,
Helpless call.
Like an avalanche onward rushing,
Man and beast together crushing;
Homes of plenty, homes of care,
Wildly sweeping, where, O, where?
Chaos all.

No time for thought, no time for prayer:
A lightning stroke from a sky all fair.
What does it mean, that cry from the street?
What says the rider who comes so fleet?
"Fly for your lives!"
In fancied security men turn and say,
"He is crazy, poor fellow," and go their way.
Horse and rider dash swiftly along;
Unheeding, they hear, O, hapless throng;
Not one survives.

Self-sacrificed, a hero he
Who dies to save humanity;
When years go by this Paul Revere
Will still call forth a pitying tear
From eyes now dim
With weeping o'er some loved and lost,
Who might have fled the holocaust
Had they but heeded that hoarse cry
From throat in vain grown parched and dry—
God pity him!

God pity him? Nay, he is blest,
And all who share his quiet rest.
God help the living, no need, the dead;
Help those who still have tears to shed—
Tears all so vain.
Theirs to carry a breaking heart;
To smile and cover up the smart
Until life's little farce is played,
And they, in robes of peace arrayed,
Forget all pain.

Another Nursery Rhyme.

DEDICATED TO CHARLES A. GARDNER.

It's lady-bugs, is it, ye want?
Then divil a bit need ye wait;
Me orchard is full of the bastes,
As ye'll see when ye open the gate.

Me apricot trees they have stripped,
Eating all of the leaves save the bones;
The fruit they have gobbled up clean,
And now they are at work on the stones.

You may talk of Icerya and sich
Horrid names for the new-fangled scale,
Or anything else ever made
From a microbe up to a whale,

But if ever there lived on the earth,
A creature more false to its name,
Than this same unladylike bug,
I'd like ye to show me the same.

OUTSIDE TOWNS.

Notes from Santa Monica, Alhambra and Coronado.

Among the many who have secured summer accommodations at this charming seaside resort are Mr. Seaman, County Superintendent of Schools, Prof. Foray of Monrovia and Prof. Molyneaux of Pomona. The two latter gentlemen with their families will occupy the handsome Van Every house.

A circular is out announcing the opening of a summer training school for teachers at Santa Monica.

Alhambra.

Edward E. Dalrymple will go to Seattle next Wednesday to offer his skill in aiding to build up the burned city.

Mr. and Mrs. James L. Wheeler and daughter found the summit of Mt. Wilson last Saturday. Miss Wheeler remained during the week to sketch for painting some of the beautiful wild flowers that adorn the circuitous trail.

Mrs. Crowell, with her two daughters, is also encamped in the cañon, in the rear of the observatory, taking life easy and greatly enjoying the rarified atmosphere.

A Mother Goose party is on the carpet for Monday evening next. Both young and old will take great pleasure in becoming gorgeously-arrayed geese for the time being, for the benefit of the Public Library.

Mr. James H. Shankland of the Los Angeles law firm of Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, with his family, has taken Mrs. L. C. Anderson's house for the three months that Mrs. Anderson will be absent in the East.

Mrs. S. C. McLellan of South Spring street, Los Angeles, has leased the residence of Edjar J. Durrell, on Wilson avenue, for one year. She will occupy it next week. Mrs. McLellan has one of the finest citrus and deciduous fruit orchards in Alhambra, and will take great pleasure in its care.

The first annual commencement of the Alhambra public schools was duly observed at the hall Friday evening, every one interested in the schools feeling in duty bound to be present. The class of '89, who will seek a higher grade of learning, are Benjamin Wilson Wallace, Ethel Woodbridge Bishop, William Pollard, Mabel Locke and Hal Fiske Bishop—a bright quintette, and one that every one in Alhambra feels justly proud of. The programme of the evening, interspersed with music, was highly interesting and attractive.

The late interesting article in THE TIMES on a trip to Wilson's Peak induced a party to try its fortunes in a similar groove on Wednesday. From their experience Thursday, while making the descent, as they held on for dear life, while 30 or more burros, with passengers, passed them going up, they came to the conclusion that THE TIMES must be read by all. The Alhambra pilgrims were Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Lattin, Clarence and Walter Lattin, Mr. T. J. Stuart and Miss Stuart, Mr. James McLaren and son De Ver, Mr. James Wayne and Mr. and Mrs. F. Edward Gray. They voted the trip a success, and though they are the best of friends, the most casual observer cannot fail to notice a decided stiffness among them as they now meet.

Ventura.

The Ladies' Guild of St. Paul's Mission of this city gave a most enjoyable social at the residence of Judge Wilde, on the avenue, on Tuesday evening. The night being perfect, a large crowd was present and a most enjoyable time was had. Music was on hand for those who cared to dance, while others played games, or strolled through the lovely grounds in the moonlight. The assembly was favored with several fine musical selections by Ventura favorites. Delicious refreshments were served by the ladies, after which dancing was resumed until quite a late hour.

Union Hall was crowded to its utmost on Thursday and Friday evenings of this week, the attraction being the drill by the Broom Brigade, consisting of eighteen of Ventura's beautiful young ladies, under the efficient command of Miss Alice Miller. The intricate evolutions were gone through with great promptness and precision, reflecting much credit upon Capt. Dahnke as a drillmaster. The drill was preceded by a short musical programme of unusual excellence. The orchestra, under the efficient direction of Grant Falkenstine, contributed no small share to the pleasure of the occasion. After the exercises refreshments were served. The entertainment was for the benefit of the Y.M.C.A. piano fund.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A PLEASANT STORY OF A BRAVE BOY.

How the Children Looked—A Moving Shadow Beneath the Trees—Moonlit Beauty—Candy-making—The Way It Is Done.

CHAPTER II.

Jack went through the great house, fastening securely every door and shutter, while Polly, followed by the happy-hearted children, directed her steps to the capacious kitchen, where the fire was still burning in the range, and an immense wood-box was filled to the brim with wood, all nicely sawed and split ready for the fire.

"What kind of candy will you make, Polly?" inquired Henry, a little anxiously, for his weakness was well known to be for the old-fashioned molasses candy, modernized somewhat by the addition of a plentiful supply of rich walnut meats.

"That means," replied Polly, laughing," will I make some of the nut candy that you like above all others? Yes, if you'll crack the nuts, Henry. Teddie, you bring a dish full from the storeroom, while Henry draws me a couple of quarts of molasses."

"O, and some peppermint candy, too, please sister," said little Peggy, lifting a pair of irresistible blue eyes and smiling on Polly with two of the prettiest red lips, which Polly always declared were sweeter than any rose buds that ever gave beauty and freshness to pure.

"Yes, little sister," replied Polly, stooping down to kiss her; "you shall have some peppermint candy, too. Jack likes that as well as you do, and we'll all turn confectioners tonight, and have a lovely time till bedtime."

With that Polly trudged gayly into the big storeroom, singing as she went, measured out about two pounds of nice powdered white sugar, skimmed off a cupful of rich, yellow cream from a pan of milk which stood in the cool creamery just beyond, and carried them out into the kitchen. There she found a granite kettle, into which she put her sugar, and poured just enough of the cream over it to thoroughly moisten it, and then set it over the fire, carefully watching it to see that it did not get hot enough to burn. Slowly the white mass melted, and, when it was all dissolved, Polly began to stir it, occasionally, and when it had boiled about five or ten minutes she dropped some of it into water, and she found to be like soft white wax, and it hung in threads from her spoon.

Jack, through with his duties, was in the kitchen with the others, and he helped Polly off with the kettle. As soon as he had placed the kettle upon the table, Polly dropped into it a small lump of cream of tartar, a little larger than a pea, and a few drops of peppermint oil.

"Now, Jack, please stir it as hard as you can, while I butter some big platters," said Polly.

"All right," said Jack, "here goes," and he stirred lustily away at the mixture, till by the time Polly had her platters buttered, and came back to look at it she said, "That will do Jack. O, it looks just beautifully. It has not sugared at all, yet it is all beginning to turn white, and it's ready to drop."

So Polly took another spoon and asking Jack to do as she did, she took up a spoonful of the white mass, and let it fall upon the platter in small splashes, and as it cooled there it lay round and white and smooth, as little Peggy said, "the loveliest peppermints you ever saw."

"What shall we do with this Polly," inquired Jack.

"Put a little more cream in it and let it boil a minute or two again, and it will be all right," replied Polly.

Jack did as directed and soon the peppermint candy was all done, looking, as Henry declared, "as fine as any store candy that could be bought, and it tastes as fine, too," he added, as he put a smooth round lozenge into his mouth, and at the same time tucked a couple into the hand of little Peggy.

"Now we'll have a high old time with the molasses candy," exclaimed Henry. "Ted and I have the nuts cracked, and we are all ready for business."

Jack brought out another generous-sized kettle, turned the molasses into it and set it over the fire, and while it was beating they sat down to a feast of the candy which they had just made.

"The very finest you ever made, Polly," remarked Jack, in a tone of immense satisfaction. "Old Beerman, the confectioner, couldn't do better himself," said Henry, in a tone of entire satisfaction.

"Please give me some more, Jack," added Ted and Peggy in a breath.

"Henry," inquired Jack, suddenly, "did you read the paper this morning?"

"No; why?" responded Henry.

"Why it had a long account of a convict that broke jail day before yesterday. The officers are on his track, and they think he's hiding somewhere in the vicinity."

"O, Jack, you don't think he'll come here, do you?" inquired Ted, with a visible shudder.

"No, Ted; don't you go now to being afraid. He wouldn't dare to show himself, and if he did he couldn't get in."

Meanwhile the molasses began to boil and rose up in a great bubbling mass that, in the eyes of the children, was most delightful to behold. How they stirred it to keep it down, and how the perspiration rolled off their hot foreheads as they stood clustered about the heated range.

Meanwhile outside the moon shone, the beautiful full moon, making the world almost as bright as day. Very dark were the shadows under the broad, spreading trees, where, streaming through the thick boughs, only faint moonbeams fell through the fluttering leaves. There was a long, winding driveway to the road, and a wide lawn, bordered by a row of stately trees.

Underneath these, if the children had looked out at this time they would have seen a man cautiously making his way with stealthy steps, avoiding as far as possible every ray of moonlight, stopping at the slightest sound he heard, and startled even by the swaying of a leaf. It was a rough face, and from beneath a pair of shaggy eyebrows looked two fierce eyes. The cheeks were seamed with deep lines, and across his chin was an ugly scar which touched the lip, and seemed to deepen its forbidding expression. Very closely did he scan the house to discover, if might be, who were its occupants, and then he crept closer and closer, till he stood in front of one of the kitchen windows with its closed shutters.

Still the merry talk went on, and he heard the sound of happy childish laughter, and Jack's careless jokes, and pretty Polly's soft tones, and peeping through he saw them all—Jack looking so manly, Harry with his boyish face, Ted with his golden curls, Polly with a forehead like a Madonna, and with large-lidded, beautiful dark eyes, and little Peggy with a face as fair as a winter's snowflake.

[To be Continued.]

Only one letter this week from my dear children, but I am thankful even for one.

ARTESIA, June 13.

Dear Mrs. Otis: I am a little girl 9 years old. My school has closed for this term. My teacher's name was Miss Stotenberg. Her home is in Los Angeles. I felt so bad to bid my teacher good-by. She was so good and kind I hope she will teach here again. I am taking lessons on the piano. I have two pet rabbits. I have a little sister 8 years old. My grandma in Iowa sent me some flower seeds last spring, and now we have some very beautiful flowers. My papa takes the MIRROR. He has been taking it ever since he has been in the State. My letter is long enough for this time. If you put this in the paper perhaps I will write again. MATTIE IBBOTSON.

I shall hope to hear again from this little friend, and during vacation I shall expect a great many letters from my boys and girls. E. A. O.

THE ALAMEDA OF MEXICO CITY.

Situated in the center of Mexico City and surrounded by filthy streets bordered by long rows of gloomy and dilapidated houses, is a grove of fine old trees which throws its welcome shade over some 15 acres of intersecting walks and grass plots. This is the Alameda of Mexico. It is the people's playground. There is considerable historical interest, too, associated with the spot; an interest which is painful to those without the pale of the Catholic Church, for trodden into the soil of the Alameda are the ashes of many martyrs who long ago died at the stake, or on the rack, to atone for their heretical obduracy.

Were the Alameda not there as a beautiful and refreshing reality one would wonder where the citizens would seek respite from the otherwise monotonous vista of dirty ill-smelling streets, and the gloomy, unattractive houses, which, with their iron-barred windows, have the appearance of fortresses, rather than of habitable dwellings. The Alameda, or, as the name signifies, shaded avenue, was presented to the city by one of the last of the viceroys of New Spain.

Formerly it did not occupy the vast space it now does. Just back of its then western boundary, but now a part of the park, was a dismal piece of ground, around which flashes a ghastly bit of history, for there the fires of the inquisition at times burned fiercely, and the wail of tortured heretics rose above the murmurs of the horror-stricken populace, whose vision of heaven as thus presented to them by the exponents of Catholicism was of naught but a gauntlet of stakes, thumb-screws and racks, and all the devilish paraphernalia of the Spanish Inquisition.

As late as 1572 twelve heretics, having been privately strangled, their bodies were publicly burned and their ashes left to mingle with the soil, as a significant warning to all who might waver in their loyalty to the Pope. Later still one Jesus Castro was burned alive, and the novel method of torture and final burning attracted a great concourse of people who were to witness the edifying spectacle of a human being used as a means of demonstrating the ingenuity of an inquisitor's method of torturing unfortunate heretics, who were hardly capable of comprehending the religious dogmas of any creed. And so ended one of the many bloody chapters in the history of the

For many years the Alameda was in an intermittent state of care and neglect. The moat which formerly surrounded it was left to fill with debris, and the park itself became a tangled network of brush and weeds. It was a place unsought for by day, and carefully avoided at night, as the reputed rendezvous of a class of gentry who had a custom of relieving the belated pedestrian, who chanced their way, of his valuables, and, in case the victim violently remonstrated, of promptly ending the dispute by a swift stroke of the poniard.

If the stately old trees, which have witnessed the events of several centuries, had the gift of speech, they could tell of midnight encounters beneath their somber shade, wherein the clashing of swords crossed in deadly combat, awakened strange echoes throughout the grove—this in the days when the law and society generally recognized the propriety of a gentleman settling his difficulties with another, or defending his honor, by running his antagonist through with cold steel at short range, or sending a bullet to his heart at 15 paces. With the progressive spirit of the age, which in this particular has affected even conservative Mexico, dueling, no longer popular, is discountenanced by law, and is rarely indulged in. No more sad requiems will be whispered through the treetops over a vanquished foe, no more will the victor, sheathing his stained rapier and folding his cloak about him, steal away in the gloom, with the guilt of murder pricking his conscience.

Such was the Alameda of olden times, but it has been wonderfully altered since then, insomuch that at the present day, to the fanciful observer, it might bear favorable comparison with a corner of Eden, as that garden is popularly supposed to have been before the devil's advent and Eve's subsequent eating of the forbidden fruit.

It is of a Sunday morning that the Alameda presents its gayest and prettiest aspect, for on that day the youth and beauty of the city stroll through the shady walks to see and to be seen, and if the reader, in his mind, will accompany the writer, we will mingle with throng which of a Sunday morning is strolling leisurely down la calle San Francisco toward one and the same objective point.

This crowd, by the way is mainly made up of young women and their mothers returning from early mass, clasping in their hands gilt-edged prayer-books replete with prayers in a dead language to the innumerable saints, of which, according to the Catholic ritual, there is one for every day in the year. This crowd is singularly good-natured, and moves forward at a peculiarly Mexican pace. It lacks the push and energy characteristic of crowds generally.

Passing to the end of La Calle Puente, and crossing a short space in the full blaze of a tropical sun, we find ourselves at the entrance to the Alameda. A long, broad avenue stretches away before us, bordered upon either side by tall trees, whose tops meet and form a sort of archway, relieved at intervals by playing fountains. Anon from some distant quarter comes the sound of music from one of the several excellent bands furnished by the Government. Occasionally the patriotic American is startled and thrilled by the familiar tones of his country's national air, rendered in excellent style.

Upon either side of the main walk are rows of chairs awaiting the patronage of the promenaders. These chairs are generally the property of old women, who move about with their features half concealed by the inseparable rebosa (or shawl) thrown over the head and drawn carefully across the mouth for modesty's sake. This singular exhibition of modesty is oftentimes counteracted by an equally singular immodest exposure of dirty bare feet, and tattered gowns, which display more of the limbs than is consistent with an American's idea of modesty. It reminds one of the stupid ostrich which, with its head buried in the sand, thinks itself safe from its pursuer.

It is upon the Alameda that one sees the beautiful women of Mexico to better advantage than elsewhere. As they stroll through the shady walks their presence lends an additional charm to the scene and one which is indelibly impressed upon the mind of the susceptible. The Mexican is a type of beauty that fades early, and one rarely meets with a handsome Mexican woman of middle age.

Nor is the beauty to be seen upon the Alameda entirely Mexican, for at the time of this writing there were many handsome American women in Mexico, and one in particular, who came from Kentucky, and confirmed the reputation of her native State for its beautiful women. The very impersonation of Columbia, her beauty provoked jealous glances from the dark eyes of many a Spanish beauty.

In the matter of dress, Mexican women are singularly lacking in taste. Left to their own devices the result is generally startling and unique. It is only with the aid of a French modiste that pleasing results are obtained.

The graceful mantilla has been discarded for the latest novelty of the French milliner. It is not always a pleasing innovation, as the effect is often incongruous.

Moving further along to a more central point of the park we will note the motley group surrounding the band stand, and for a time at least seemingly forgetful of their misery and peverty as they listen to the excellent music.

It is as dirty and as poverty-stricken a gathering as one would find in many a day's travel.

Occasionally we are approached by dirty-faced and bare-footed boys, who beg of us to buy their matches in tones of voice modulated to the expression of their large dark eyes. Watching the crowd as it passes and presenting a sort of kaleidoscopic effect the thoughtful observer is impressed with the two extremes of wealth and poverty which has opened an impassable gulf between the rich and poor of Mexico. A prosperous, well-to-do middle class scarcely exists.

At a given hour the band plays a closing piece as a signal for the fashionable promenaders to start homeward, and with their departure the grounds are left in the quiet possession of the poor people, who remain throughout the afternoon.

As night approaches the place is almost deserted, a weird sort of silence settles over the grove, and scarcely a sound may be heard, save it is the dreamy murmur of the fountains or the love whisperings of some humble swain, which mingle with, and lose themselves in, the soughing of the wind through the tree tops.

WOMAN AND HOME.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF WIFE AND MOTHER.

Some Valuable Suggestions—Soup Making—Angry and Thoughtless Mothers—The Tender Little Ones—The Pricelessness of Everyday Blessings.

Our every-day blessings are taken too frequently as a matter of course. They are so much a part of our lives that we do not stop to consider how much of a blessed benediction they are, nor how dark and barren would be our lives without them. The every-day greetings that come to us in our homes; the words of thoughtful kindness that we listen to almost unthinkingly, how would our hearts miss them if they should die out forever into silence, leaving nothing to us but the careless speech of the world and the indifference of the masses. What lends the charm to the return trip of the wearied traveler, but the thought of the waiting hearts warm with a loving welcome? As the sky bends above the earth filled with its oceans of sunshine, so above our lives broods the home firmament, starred with the tenderness of the constellated hearts which throb in unison with our own.

Some years ago I was in a southern city, and lived for a few weeks under the same roof with a gentleman who had married, some years before, a young girl with a face like a lily—married her, I suppose, for her beauty, with no thought of her fitness for the responsible position as wife and mother. They had two beautiful little baby boys, the eldest perhaps 3 years of age, a bright, winning child, with pretty ways and soft, cooing words; the other a lovely baby a year old, with mamma's large blue eyes and sunny hair. Sitting quietly in my room one day, which adjoined theirs, busy with my books, all at once I heard an angry woman's voice saying, "I should be glad if you were dead, and the children too, all of you."

"Wife, think what you are saying; your heart surely does not mean it."

"Yes, it does; I wish you were all dead, every one of you, then I would have some comfort, some freedom," was the heartless response of the thoughtless wife and mother.

And all this because she could not have her way about some petty trifle which her husband kindly but wisely refused his consent to grant her. Poor husband, I thought, how have you marred your own future in being snared by a simply beautiful face, marrying as you did with no thought of the qualities essential to make your wife a companion for yourself, and a fitting mother for your children. I watched that man as the months passed by, grow sad-faced, distrait, with lines of care and sorrow deepening on his fine face, I heard after the rude blows which some times fell on the little quivering forms when the mother was momentarily angered, and I felt that a shadow darker than death was hovering over that household—a shadow that life would not see lifted, but which would grow darker as the years went by.

"I feel as if I could kill my child, when he is naughty," said another thoughtless mother to me; "it makes me so angry. Don't you ever feel so?" She inquired.

"No," I replied, "I pity them when they do wrong, it grieves but does not anger me."

"Well, I do not understand your feeling so," was her response.

Poor woman, how little fitted was she to be a wife and mother. How much wrong is done the little ones through such influences as these. How will she answer at the last when the solemn question is asked, "Where are the children that I have given thee?"

Eating and drinking, as we all realize, is a necessity which claims our daily attention. Let me tell you how to make a delicious stock for a soup, which shall not cost you over a quarter, and yet be enough to last a small family nearly a whole week. Buy at your butcher's a good soup bone. Put it into two or three quarts of water and boil it for several hours. Then take out the bone and meat, and set the broth away to cool. When cold skim off all the fat and put it again over the fire. Add half an onion, a small carrot, and a half a dozen good-sized tomatoes. Boil an hour or so, then season properly and strain all through a colander, when it is ready for use. What is left can be warmed up, and will be as good as when first prepared.

NOTES.

When a coat needs a thorough cleaning, apply with a sponge strong coffee, to which has been added a few drops of ammonia, and rub well with a colored woolen cloth.

Compote of Apples.—Pare and core nice, tart apples; place sufficient in a preserving kettle to just cover the bottom; add a very little water; cover the kettle and steam until the apples are tender, but not soft; then dust them heavily with sugar; lift them carefully with a skimmer; place them on a pretty flat glass dish. Add to the water remaining in the kettle sufficient sugar to thoroughly sweeten it; add a few pieces of yellow rind of lemon; boil a moment; pour it over the apples and stand aside to get very cold.

Macedoine of Fruit.—This can be made most exquisitely at the season when the greatest number of fruits can be obtained at the same time, although it may be made with only two or three varieties. Arrange stone cherries, berries, currants, raspberries, pineapples, oranges and bananas, or whatever fruits you may have, in such proportions as your taste may direct, with sugar between each layer. You may omit the oranges, and express the juice of three over a large dishful. Serve very cold and pass cream with it for those who like it.

Therefore, please observe and take advantage of the fact that
FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS
I will make a great reduction on former prices.
Imported and Key West Cigars, 10c each; former price, two for 25c.
Imported Cigars, heretofore sold three for 50c, can now be had two for 25c; and those sold for 25c can now be had for 20c.
My best brands of nickel cigars, six for 25c.
Star, Climax and Horseshoe Tobacco, 45c per pound; Pincher do. for 40c per pound.
Leading brands of nickel Cigarettes, six packages for 25c; two 10c pages for 15c, and 20c packages for 15c. Still greater reductions made when sold by the box or quantity.
Meerschaum Pipes and Cigar Holders will be sold at cost. All other goods in proportion. Still greater inducements will be offered to the trade and in quantities.
As I will surrender possession of my store on the 30th day of June, you will please call early and secure a bargain.
I thank my friends and customers for the patronage heretofore bestowed upon me, and trust that at some future date I may be able to serve you again.
